Bride Is Killed In Virginia Crash; Snowfall to Cease Today, Cold to Stay

Snow and ice, gripping Washington and the mid-Atlantic area yesterday, caused the death of two persons near the Capital and sent a score more to the hospital suffering from injuries or exposure.

Both fatalities resulted from automobile accidents in blinding snow on icy roads. The dead are Mrs. Howard Loring, 22, of Boston, Mass., and First Lieut. Sidney Norman Gholsen, 30, stationed at Fort Meade, Md.

Mrs. Loring was a bride of three days on a honeymoon trip to Florida. She was killed in a collision of three automobiles on U. S. Highway 1, about 30 miles south of Fredericksburg, Va. Her husband suffered a near injury and three other persons were hurt.

Gholsen was fatally injured when his automobile went over a 20-foot embankment on the Fort Meade-Laurel Road half a mile from the camp. Dr. John Claffy, Anne Arundel County deputy medical examiner, caused the accident.

Two members of the Maryland House of Delegates were injured and a third shaken up in a crash at West Friendship, near Ellicott City, Md., on the National Pike, as they returned to their homes from Annapolis for the weekend recess of the Legislature.

Plane Flights Canceled

Charles M. See, Cumberland, suffered injuries to the lip and eye, while S. Rinehart Cohill, of Hancock, received injuries to the leg and shoulder. Henry Holzapfel, Hagerstown, the third, was the delegate who escaped injury.

Falling temperatures iced many streets and high winds hampered efforts to keep the streets sanded. More than 40 sanding trucks worked all day and were ordered to continue throughout the night.

Air lines canceled flights between here and New York. Officials here said that heavy snow at New York made landings and some takeoffs too dangerous. Plane service to the South and West was not interrupted.

Bus lines reported their schedules were 30 minutes behind for buses from the South, and an hour for those arriving from the North. Railroad officials said trains were running into Washington on time.

Washington motorists were advised by the American Automobile Association not to leave home by car unless absolutely necessary.

Chinese Arrested Here by New York Narcotic Officers

Lee Wong (Pink Cheek) Sing turned the wrong corner last night.

New York Narcotics Bureau Detectives John Catonne and George Zegers had been pursuing Sing, alias Lee Sam, alias Pink Cheeks, since last September, when the latter was indicted on 20 counts of selling narcotics, but alone of four alleged operators of a huge dope ring had evaded police.

District Attorney Dewey personally assigned the two detectives to the case and since September they chased Sing through six States. Last night the officers got off a train in Union Station, went directly to the 600 block of H Street Northwest and saw a Chinese with pinkish-appearing cheeks in the first store they came to. It was Pink Cheeks. He was trying to raise a $2,000 bond last night at Police Headquarters.

Knudsen Urges 'Cooling-Off' Period to Curb Arms Strikes

OPM Director Suggests 40-Day Delay to Allow for Concilation

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

Following the OMP's successful efforts to end the Bethlehem Steel Co. strike at Lackawanna, N. Y., William S. Knudsen yesterday proposed to Congress a compulsory 40-day "cooling off" period in advance of strikes as a conciliation plan for defense industries.

The proposal, made by the Office of Production Management chief in a memorandum to Chairman Sumner (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Judiciary Committee, recommended that failure of either party to defer strike action until the end of the cooling-off period be penalized by forfeiture of rights before the National Labor Relations Board.

Knudsen's plan was made public as prospects for labor peace appeared to brighten following the settlement of the two-day Bethlehem strike. It was learned that a conference yesterday between R. J. Thomas, president of the C. I. O. United Automobile Workers Union, and Sidney Hillman, OPM associate director general, is likely to be followed early next week by a general union agreement to accept terms of settlement of the six-week Allis-Chalmers strike in Milwaukee.

At the same time, word was received from Philadelphia of the termination of a 10-day strike at the National Supply Co., making Diesel engines for the Navy. The company's 225 employes, participants in a strike called by the A. F. of L. machinists' association, will return to work Monday.

On the darker side of the picture, however, was the spread of the C. I. O. Farm Equipment Workers Organizing Committee strike to a fourth plant of the International Harvester Co., the big McCormick works in Chicago, and growing

GHA Client Says Hospital Neglected Her

Charges It Barred Her Doctor, Let Her Suffer Without Medical Care

By Gerald G. Gross.

A former HOLC employe told a District Court jury yesterday that, suffering a leg fracture, she lay all night untreated in a room at Emergency Hospital because the doctor of her choice happened to be a Group Health Association staff man.

One of the Government's most important witnesses in its antitrust case against organized medicine, Miss Sara Abbott, delivered a story that stiff cross-examination by defense counsel failed to shake.

Struck by a car the evening of January 26, 1938, she was removed at once to Emergency Hospital, Miss Abbott testified. On learning that she was a G. H. A. member, an emergency room intern told her she could not be admitted as such nor could she be treated by any of the health agency's physicians, Miss Abbott told the jury.

"You will have to let the hospital select your doctor," she quoted the intern, whose name the witness could not recall.

The middle-aged patient, now a resident of Trenton, N. J., finally gave in and was placed in a room. According to Miss Abbott's testimony, the intern told her Dr. William B. Marbury would be sent to attend her.

It was not until the next morning that Dr. Marbury came, said the witness, after she had lingered all night without a doctor even looking at her. And then, she continued, Dr. Marbury did not treat her but

Wheeler Busy At Filibuster, George Says

Montana Senator Denies Accusation In Aid Bill Debate

By Robert C. Albright

Enlivened by a blunt charge of "filibuster" and a flat denial, Senate debate on the lend-lease bill yesterday went on and on.

The willful delay charge was shouted by Chairman George of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in a clash with Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, opposition leader.

It was one of many short-tempered exchanges as the Senate concluded its eleventh day of debate without any action on the bill. Administration forces for the third successive day met each opposition onslaught with a challenge from the floor.

One spokesman for the bill, Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut, and one opposition leader, Senator Wheeler, presented "set" speeches. But a dozen Senators for and against the bill joined in the furious interludes.

At one point, the chair (Senator Murdock [Democrat], of Utah, in it) complained of "disorderly" debate and requested Senators to speak one at a time.

The sharpest controversy developed after Wheeler declared that the bill's limitation of $1,300,000,000 on Army and Navy supplies lent to England "didn't mean anything" since no standards were set up for determining the value.

"I deny that," shouted George.

"You can't deny it," replied Wheeler.

"I do deny it," said George. "I

'White Rain' Thrills Chilean Reporter as Snow Covers D. C.

By Joaquin Muirhead,
Post Guest Writer

Editor's note: Excited by his first experience with a heavy snowfall yesterday Joaquin Muirhead, of Santiago, Chile, guest reporter on The Post, yesterday set down in an unfamiliar language the following impressions of an unfamiliar experience:

MUIRHEAD

This is the first heavy fall of snow I have seen in all my life in a big city, like Washington. In Santiago, we never have snow. I f somebody wants to see this kind of view in Chile he must go to the mountains and the mountains are very far away in my country. But in the city we never see this wonderful spectacle.

About 25 years ago, in Puente Alto, where I was only a kid, I saw something like this. I can remember very well. When that happened all my friends and I began to play with the snow. We escaped from home and we went to the streets. There, we tried to make figures with the snow and as soon as they were made we threw at them small bits of snow.

That phenomenon was never repeated, although I was always expecting the snow in the town where I live.

This morning, when I waked up I saw the white rain again. The ground was covered with it. I felt as happy as Napoleon when he was

Tokyo Defers 'Forceful Action;' Attitude Plain, French Declare

By the Associated Press

Tokyo (Saturday), March 1. Hidden diplomatic maneuvers may delay a final decision on mediation between French Indo-China and Thailand, reliable sources indicated today, even though France apparently ignored Japan's ultimatum to yield large territories to Thailand by last midnight or suffer "forceful" Japanese action.

The French Embassy here still was awaiting final word from the Vichy government and it was believed the Japanese would postpone determination of their course until some sort of reply is received, even though the deadline expired many hours ago.

Parley Planned Today

Tokyo newspapers said a prospective meeting today with Indo-China delegates at the foreign office would be followed "in a day or two" by a conference of the Japanese cabinet and high command.

Presumably the military leaders would hear a report on the Indo-China meeting before deciding on a Japanese course of action.

In any event, Japan announced yesterday that the armistice between Indo-China and Thailand would continue to its expiration date March 7 at noon.

Reliable sources disclosed that in a conference Thursday, French Ambassador Charles Arsene Henry flatly rejected Japan's "final mediation proposal," and that a compromise plan then was formed and transmitted to Vichy with a reply demanded by Friday midnight. This reply still is awaited, but competent quarters predicted it too would be a rejection.

Reliable sources said France had offered to settle the border war in January by returning to Thailand a small part of Cambodia and the Luang region along the northern bulge of the Mekong River, but excluding the city of Luangprabang.

Thailand was said to have demanded a much larger slice of Indo-China. Then came Japan's "final proposal" for returning the Luangprobang region, a part of Laos and the northwest section of Cambodia to Thailand.

Press Is Pessimistic

When this was rejected, the compromise proposal slightly reduced these demands.

The newspaper Yomiuri published an extra on an unconfirmed report from Hanoi that Indo-China might accept "Japan's proposal," but other papers took a pessimistic view, reiterating their belief that Indo-China was holding out at the instigation of alien powers.

The paper Hochi declared that if

U.S. Conferring With Filipinos On Care of Civilians in War

Manila a Most Vulnerable City; Evacuation Plans Are Considered

Copyright by New York Times

Manila, Feb. 28.—Carefully avoiding any alarming tone that might create war hysteria here, High Commissioner Francis B. Sayre today disclosed that American authorities have been planning a civilian defense program since last October for use if war should strike the Philippines.

He announced that a civilian emergency planning board, secretly organized last autumn, had been working with commonwealth officials, the Army and the Navy toward perfecting a plan for protecting civilians here against possible alien attack. The bombing of Manila, most vulnerable spot under the American flag, very evidently is the extreme emergency for which the preparations are being made.

The Army, Navy, Commonwealth, high commissioner and various chambers of commerce are represented on Sayre's emergency board, of which the chairman is Lieut. Col. Robert M. Carswell, the high commissioner's military aide. Sayre declined to disclose detailed defense plans beyond saying that evacuation of Manila had been considered in event of an emergency.

The reasons for this are quite apparent to any one who has been here. Manila is one of the most defenseless cities anywhere. It is impossible to build shelter underground because sea water is struck at a depth of about 3 feet. The city is extremely vulnerable to fire, much of it being of old Spanish construction or grass-roofed native houses in outlying districts. Well-placed incendiary bombs on a windy day would level the entire metropolis, which contains more than 600,000 persons, including some 4,000 American civilians, 5,000 American Army personnel and probably 5,000 other whites.

Sayre said committees had been appointed to handle general supplies, transportation, medical aid, communications, general welfare, personnel and labor.

30 Italian Planes Downed In Albania

R. A. F. Success Scored Without Loss; Greeks Repulse Attacks

By J. Reilly O'Sullivan
Associated Press Staff Writer

Athens, Greece, Feb. 28.—British planes shot down more than 30 Italian warplanes over the southern Albanian battle front today without a single loss to themselves, the Greek command announced tonight at the close of four months of war.

This extraordinary aerial success—the biggest victory ever reported for a single British squadron in the Greek-Italian war—was said to have paralleled local successes for Greek ground troops.

Italian tank attacks were repulsed, the Greek command reported, and one tank was destroyed.

The British had announced earlier that 26 Italian planes—in formation much bigger than the Royal Air Force attacking unit—were known to have been destroyed and that nine others were crippled.

Athens newspapers said the Italians had lost 50 planes in the last seven days, half of that number accounted for by Greek fighters and by antiaircraft fire.

Minor local engagements were reported along the front today, but the Greeks said severe losses were inflicted by Greek artillery on a force of Italians "trapped" on the central front. The Greeks said two counter attacks were repulsed and two of the Italians' front line positions taken.

(The Italian high command reported today that two enemy planes were shot down yesterday in an attempt to attack an unidentified air base).

Reaffirms Alliance After Eden's Visit Ankara Communique

By G. E. R. Gedye

Ankara, Turkey, Feb. 28.—Behind the phrasing of the brief communique of this afternoon summing up the results of British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden's visit is concealed a momentous new development in the Anglo-Turkish alliance.

This has now passed from the theoretical to the practical stage in which has been established precisely what role this country will play during the coming campaign in the Balkans and the Mediterranean.

The communique says that "the two governments placed on record their firm attachment to the Anglo-Turkish alliance." This declaration should remove the last traces of suspicion that the declaration this Ankara recently signed with the Bulgarians has altered anything concerning Anglo-Turkish friendship.

Common Policy Agreed On

The communique declares that "the special consideration given to the problems of the Balkans confirm closely the common interests of Great Britain and Turkey," and that "the two governments found themselves in complete agreement as to their policies and all other problems." This has more significance than meets the eye. Indeed, the Balkans were the crux of the discussions concluded today. Eden, Gen. Sir John G. Dill, chief of the imperial general staff, and their

Glass Asks FBI to Inquire Into 'Mothers' Besieging Him

Senator Carter Glass last night asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to check up on the Mother's Crusade and find out, among other things, whether the members are mothers.

The fiery Virginia Senator released a formal statement following the re-arrest of Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling, leader of the women's crusade against the lend-lease bill, in front of his office.

Mrs. Dilling, co-author of "The Red Network," and her colleagues staged a sit-down strike in front of Senator Glass' office earlier in the day. They explained that they had heard that the Virginian had a Union Jack on his desk.

The women insisted they merely wanted to give him an American flag. When the police agreed to let Mrs. Dilling present the flag to a secretary, a rumpus ensued. The police then took the leaders to the first precinct station.

"A group of women representing themselves to be mothers and describing themselves as members of something they call a mother's mobilization created at my office today a noisy disorder of which any self-respecting fishwife would be ashamed," Senator Glass said.

"These misguided people brought inconvenience to my office employes and to persons attempting to visit my office on legitimate business. It is my understanding that they have taken up their abode in Washington for several weeks and have consistently made themselves offensive in the Capitol buildings.

"Therefore, I have asked the Federal Bureau of Investigation to determine who is financing their unpleasant visit, what agents and organizations are directing them, and whether they have complied with our laws requiring the registration

Police Cordon Isolates Sofia, Communications Suspended; German Troops in Rumania On Move Toward Border

The long-brewing Balkan crisis apparently has come to a head.

The following developments disclosed results of the diplomatic struggle in which Great Britain and the Axis powers have sought the upper hand in Southeast Europe:

1. Bulgaria, under heavy German pressure, has agreed to become today the seventh signatory to the three-power Axis pact.

2. The great German army in Rumania is on the march toward the Bulgarian frontier, ready to pour across the borders of that country as soon as the signing of the pact brings her into the Axis partnership.

Some reports indicated the march into Bulgaria was already under way.

3. England, acting swiftly to meet this new threat to her Greek ally, announced "complete agreement" had been reached with Turkey on plans for countering any new German thrust southward. Anglo-Turkish action against Germany has become "a distinct possibility," it was declared.

4. In Ankara, an authoritative spokesman warned that Turkey may be compelled to fight "side by side" with Great Britain if a German push through Bulgaria brings an extension of war in the Balkans and threatens Turkish security.

Early today the Associated Press reported from Belgrade that Bulgaria had officially informed Yugoslavia she would sign the Axis tripartite pact within a few hours.

The Bulgarian charge d'affaires, Ivan Stratieff, informed Yugoslav Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs Smaljanic that the pact would be signed, formally taking Bulgaria into the Rome-Berlin-Tokyo alliance.

Premier Reported on Way to Vienna for Ceremony

Diplomatic quarters said Bulgarian Premier Bogdan Philoff and Foreign Minister Ivan Popoff were flying to Vienna in a special plane for the formal signature which would automatically permit German troops to enter the country as allies of Bulgaria.

German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop and the Japanese Ambassador to Berlin, Lieut. Gen. Hiroshi Oshima, already are in Vienna.

Representatives of Italy, Hungary and Rumania were expected to partake in the signing ceremony.

Diplomats felt Britain must now break relations with Bulgaria.

Diplomatic dispatches from Rumania told of mass movements of German soldiers in full battle kit through the blocked-off streets of Bucharest, less than 50 miles from the Bulgarian border.

The direction of the movement was not stated, but diplomats needed no clairvoyance to deduce it was southward toward the Danube, where Nazi pontoon bridges already have been erected and tested from the Rumanian shore.

Sofia was like a besieged city, surrounded by policemen and cut off from communication even with its own provinces.

Bulgar Army Said to Be Marching Toward Turkey

It was reported that the Bulgarian air defense corps had been fully mobilized to meet the threat of British planes flying north from Greece.

Another dispatch said Bulgarian army units were moving through the country principally toward the Turkish border.

Other Sofia information said two Bulgarians employed at the Greek Legation had been taken into custody in a series of wholesale arrests which included numbers of unidentified British subjects.

The British Legation was packed for a quick getaway ahead of the Nazi invasion.

Britain and Turkey, in the face of fast-developing events, were presenting a united front.

British Foreign Secretary Anthony Eden and Imperial Staff Chief General Sir John Dill departed for Cairo following a four-day sojourn in Ankara, where they mapped joint plans with Turkey's highest government and military leaders.

A communique, issued after Eden had conferred lengthily with Sir Stafford Cripps, British Ambassador to Russia who flew to Ankara, said the British and Turkish officials reached "complete agreement on all problems of mutual interest."

The announcement stated that the present Balkan crisis re-

a preview of the Sunday Post

"I'll Have You Yet," He Told the Bride

The world has seen many bizarre honeymoons, but surely none much more so than Karen's—a honeymoon trip with a former suitor pursuing her and swearing to break her marriage and his own. No wonder Karen finally fled to try to get the world back into proper focus. But when Jan disappeared at the same time, small wonder that his wife and her husband thought they had run away together.

Unusual situations and interesting people make Sunday's complete novel in The Post one which lovers of romantic fiction will enjoy. (But will some reader please tell us why these stories all must have heroines and villains with such outlandish names—couldn't they be John and Katherine as easily as Jan and Karen?)

"What's that building?" "Dunno. It wasn't there at noon!"

They probably told that joke when Rome was booming in the reign of Augustus and it's being dusted off in Washington today. Because Washington, fastest growing big city of the 1930-1940 decade, is shooting forward still faster under the prod of national defense activity. Eddie Folliard measures 1941's beanstalk growth for you, in Sunday's Post. You'll be surprised at what he's found—and what he predicts.

Teachers Play, Students Work In Sunday "Pictures" Section

The Public Takes Another Look at Willkie

Mr. Willkie's actions—and statements—since election have caused some Republicans near-apoplexy, brought threats of "read him out of the party" from others, won tumultuous applause from many. How does Wendell Willkie measure up with the American public today? The Gallup Poll found out—and tells you in Sunday's Post.

Three Interesting Women

One Amazing Man

Washington society has attended many an embassy - sponsored tea for the benefit of some foreign country. Rare is the diplomatic hostess who has a fete for an American cause. Hope Ridings Miller writes of such a one in Sunday's society section—Senhora de Martins, wife of the Brazillian Ambassador, who is giving a benefit tea dance and fashion show at the embassy, for the American Red Cross!

One of Washington's often-discussed women is Judge Fay Bentley, of the Juvenile Court. Katherine Graham visited the court, talked to the judge, writes entertainingly of both.

And third of our interesting women is the young wife who puts a really unusual—not to say startling—problem before Mary Haworth in tomorrow's column: that of the otherwise perfect husband who insists on keeping their marriage "platonic"—but is willing to let some other man provide the child his wife wants so badly!

British Hold Trump in Pact With Turkey

By Kirke L. Simpson,
Associated Press Staff Writer

A Nazi-British show-down in the Balkans seemed at hand as this was written. Rumor ran riot through southeastern Europe. Warstorm warnings fluttered from every post of observation.

Every fresh repor of German military activity pointed toward a Nazi march, perhaps already in progress, into Bulgaria.

There seems small doubt that the British, owing to Foreign Minister Anthony Eden's reported understanding with Turkey, hold a strong trump hand. Only time can tell whether that includes a Turkish commitment to join the conflict against Germany in event of a Nazi incursion into Bulgaria.

There seems no question, however, that the British have fully paved the way for a powerful air counterattack on any Nazi armies that jump off from Rumanian bases, and also upon Rumanian oil wells. The first pitched battle of a new war in the Balkans well might come in the air over Ploesti, the nerve center of Rumanian oil industry.

Ploesti Main Target

There seems every reason to assume that the Royal Air Force, poised at Greek bases within two hours' flight of Ploesti, would make its main smash there. It would have a double value strategically. Whatever strength the Germans have mustered in Rumania for a push into Bulgaria to aid Italy, much of it must be retained there to guard that prime Nazi oil source.

The wells, pipe lines, railroads and the Danube River route over which oil is transported to Germany to grease the Nazi western war machine are vulnerable to air attack. They would afford an even more alluring target to British airmen than would Nazi armies thrusting through Bulgaria until such forces had reached the narrow and still snow-clogged passes through the Balkan and Rhodore mountains.

Those are the Bulgarian routes by which Nazi forces could move to outflank the Greek front against Italy in Albania. There have been rumors of intensive German preparation of air fields in Bulgaria, and the massing of very powerful air forces to guard Nazi armies from British air hawks.

Hitler's Hand Forced

That might explain the dropping away of the German air attack on England in the last few weeks. Shifting of strong Nazi air groups eastward is indicated, the purpose being to guard Rumanian oil sources and transportaton routes and maintain control of the air over Nazi armies on the march in the Balkans.

The British must have had some clear-cut reason for forcing the issue with Germany in the East. In part, it must be to weaken the force of the Nazi air and sea attack on England and its sea lanes in the months just ahead. It seems probable, however, that British Balkan strategy is based on belief that a major air offensive against oil sources in Rumania would seriously cripple the German war effort on all fronts.

There is a possibility that British-Turkish understandings permit British use of Turkish Black Sea bases, even if Turkey does not directly enter the conflict. That route of low altitude oversea flying to strike at Rumanian oil targets would have special advantages for the British.

Whatever the reason, however, the fact is that Britain has aggressively called Hitler's hand in the Balkans at every turn. She must be prepared to take quick advantage of the situation she has deliberately sought to create.

British, Turks Plan To Meet Nazi Push

ceived "special attention" during the Anglo-Turkish conferences.

The International News Service reported that a Turkish spokesman declared Britain and Turkey "must envisage without delay the possibility of being compelled to fight side by side" should a German invasion of Bulgaria ignite a Balkan war menacing the Turkish "security zone."

Dardanelles Chief Concern

Any aggression toward this zone, which concerns primarily the safety of the Dardanelles-Bosphorus link between the Mediterranean and Black Seas, "cannot be tolerated," the spokesman was quoted as saying.

The spokesman said the Anglo-Turkish talks "dealt not only with political and diplomatic questions, but also with military matters."

He did not comment on Turkey's likely action in the event German troops march through Bulgaria against Greece, giving the northwest Turkish frontiers a wide berth.

His words indicated Turkey had committed herself to concerted action with her British ally only if the Germans move in a southeasterly direction—toward the Dardanelles.

There was no indication that Turkey would be prepared to hurl troops into Bulgaria to meet any German advance, other than a push toward Turkey herself. Turkey and Bulgaria signed a nonaggression agreement 12 days ago.

The New York Times Balkan correspondent reported that if the Germans enter Bulgaria, Turkey, rather than moving in to oppose them, probably would invoke the wartime clause of the Montreux convention, covering the status of the Dardanelles, and permit British warships to enter the Black Sea.

Imperils Nazi Flank

This would cut off German shipping links with Russia and imperil the flank of any Nazi forces seeking to pursue the traditional route toward Istanbul through the Dobruja and eastern Bulgaria.

Considerable interest was attached, meanwhile, to the lengthy report Sir Stafford Cripps made to Eden regarding the Soviet attitude toward the Balkan situation.

The factor that restrains Turkey more than any other in the matter of cooperating with Britain is the Russian position. Turkey has repeatedly signified a determination to do nothing that might be construed as offending Soviet interests.

The Associated Press reported that Eden, after flying to Egypt, probably would visit Athens for consultations with Greek leaders on massive British assistance for the Greek armies.

France Cuts Bread Rations By 20 Per Cent

By Lansing Warren.
Copyright by New York Times

Vichy, Feb. 28.—The warning of a serious shortage of wheat and bread in France was given in the announcement today from the prefecture of this district that beginning tomorrow the bread ration is to be cut down 20 per cent.

In official quarters, it is not concealed that the same measure is anticipated in all parts of France. The Ministry of Agriculture and the service of supplies have made no secret of the fact that wheat supplies were in deficit. An estimate made early in the year was that at the present rate of consumption existing stocks would not last much beyond the first of April.

Today's regulations provide that the bread tickets for 50, 200, 250, and 350 grams each, will henceforth be worth 40, 160, 200, and 280 grams, and in flour or other flour products 80 per cent of that face value.

Sale of Cake Forbidden

The manufacture, display, and sale of cake or fresh flour products has moreover been strictly prohibited so that all available flour may be used for bread. The sale of flour to private consumers has also been forbidden.

The full meaning of the new restrictions can only be fully understood when it is recalled that a large proportion of each meal among poor French people consists of bread. In normal times most people eat considerably more bread than the extra large ration of 400 grams which has been allotted for manual workers.

The bread crisis is coming at a time when it is difficult to get potatoes. Brittany, the great potato producing country, is not shipping in the occupied zone because of difficulties of marketing, according to the newspaper Le Matin, and here there are so many regulations about the transport of potatoes that they are absent from most markets.

The tendencies of the press in recent weeks would indicate that when the shortage of wheat begins to be felt it will be blamed on the British blockade.

On official instruction the press today published an item about a banana boat having been halted by the blockade with the officially indicated caption "no bananas for French children."

British Halt 6th French Ship

Vichy, France, Feb. 28 (AP).—French officials announced today the British had intercepted the 3,349-ton freighter Rose Schiaffino, the sixth French vessel to run afoul the British sea blockade in three days.

The Rose Schiaffino was halted in the Mediterranean en route to Algiers and taken to Gibraltar.

Controlled Press Attacks U. S.

Vichy, Feb. 28.—Attacks on the American Government are becoming frequent in the controlled press of the occupied region of France.

One of the principal themes of these attacks is the alleged action of Admiral William D. Leahy, American Ambassador, who is charged with using his influence to turn the Vichy government away from its interest in the matter of collaboration with Germany. An article in L'Oeuvre says Leahy has gone so far as to assure the Petain government that the United States is about to enter the war.

Other newspaper articles have charged Admiral Leahy with offering financial inducements to the Vichy government to procrastinate in carrying out the pledge of collaboration.

Italian People Shocked by Fall Of Mogadiscio

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Feb. 28.—The shocking news that Mogadiscio had been evacuated was broken to the Italian people today by their war bulletin, which said that "a fierce struggle" continues to the north of this city. After Bengasi, this is the hardest blow which the Italian empire and the Italian pride has received in the war.

There is no other part in Italian Somaliland worth anything now that Kishmayu is also occupied, and, as the communique indicates, this is tantamount to a withdrawal into the Ethiopian hinterland. Mogadiscio is a great name in Italian colonial history, and particularly since the Ethiopian war when it was the base for Marshal Rodolfo Graziani's drive northward.

Mario Appelius today, in Benito Mussolini's Popolo d'Italia, says that the struggle in East Africa is "terribly hard for us, and we must therefore expect another bad news which will be especially painful for our Italian feelings."

Italian Division Shattered

With British Forces in Jubaland, Feb. 28 (AP).—West African Gold Coast forces have shattered an entire Italian division in fighting on the Juba River in Italian Somaliland, it was reported today.

The British troops were said to have captured three Italian brigades, two of whom won distinction fighting for the Allies in the World War.

British Leave Castelrosso

London, Feb. 28 (AP).—The British announced tonight that their forces which had occupied the Italian Island of Castelrosso in the eastern Mediterranean had been withdrawn.

A joint admiralty and war office communique said "our forces which landed on the Island of Castelrosso last Tuesday have now been withdrawn, having accomplished their object."

The island is a few miles off the southwest Turkish coast and is the easternmost of the Italian Dodecanese group.

British Close on Cheren

Cairo, Feb. 28.—The British northern column in Eritrea is now covering positions north of Cheren, and the town is surrounded on three sides although the Italians thus far have been able to maintain their line of retreat along the railway for Asmara. British troops west of the town drove forward to better positions today.

Royal Air Force and South African planes, meanwhile, bombed and machine-gunned the Italians south of Cheren, damaging light fortifications and killing and injuring many. The railway line for Asmara was also bombed and the Zula airdrome near Massawa was machine-gunned.

Belgian Troops in Ethiopia

London, Feb. 28 (AP).—Belgian circles said today that the first contingents of Belgian colonial troops reached the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan several days ago to join Britain's forces operating in Ethiopia.

Nazis Claim 20 English Ships Sunk in 2 Days

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Feb. 28.—Germans closed the books on February with a compilation of 20 British ships, totaling 146,000 tons, sunk or damaged in the last two days, and remembered Hitler's declaration that submarine warfare will "begin" in March or April. Many believed he would give the word before March was many days old.

Artillery Gen. Paul Hasse, in an article in the Boersen Zeitung, described a German army of millions drilling with fanatical zeal in a pause between blitzkriegs to master the handling of intricate war gear.

"The course of the war so far has taught that the first essential is to be quicker than the foe," he wrote. "Quicker in grasping decisions and carrying out orders, quicker in movement by foot, horse, wheel and armored car, quicker in surprise attack and most of all quicker in taking full advantage of any break."

(Reports emanating in Vichy to the effect that the Germans have begun a methodical evacuation of all civilians from a 22-mile-wide stretch of the French channel coast, possibly as part of final preparations for attack on England, were met in Berlin by a shrug of official shoulders.

("That," said a spokesman, "is a military matter, pure and simple, about which we are unable to give any information."

(The Vichy report said the evacuation began two weeks ago.)

(The official German wireless said reports that Bulgaria would adhere to the tripartite pact "were not confirmed, but neither were they expressly denied," and called attention to "vague replies" at the foreign office as to whether Europe could expect a "quiet political and diplomatic weekend.")

Authorized military observers commented that the high command's announcement of 20 ships sunk or damaged in two days meant German marine and air services have inflicted a "fourth great convoy catastrophe" on Britain in a short time.

To nine ships sunk and seven damaged in an air attack west of Ireland, which was reported yesterday, the high command today added one ship sunk and 12 others damaged by bombers.

To the aerial toll of 146,000 tons of shipping, the high command added 22,000 tons sunk by a returning submarine.

One plane alone was credited with destroying 240,000 tons up to February 27.

In attacks on England, it was said, six airports, hangars, shelters and an aircraft factory were bombed.

U. S. Indicts 80 In Hawaii on Boat Registry Charges

Honolulu, Feb. 28 (AP).—A Federal grand jury indicted 80 persons, most of them Japanese, and three fishing companies today on charges of conspiracy in connection with the registration of fishing sampans.

Angus Taylor, United States attorney, said persons indicted included United States citizens who were registered as owners of fishing boats and aliens who were charged with being the actual owners.

Naval and Army authorities have for some time expressed suspicion of operators of some of the sampans here.

Boston, March 1 (AP).—The impending resignation of Louis K. Liggett as president of the United Drug Company, which he founded in 1903, was revealed today. A company announcement said Liggett would continue his association with the concern as chairman of the board.

On March 11, Liggett will name J. A. Galvin, executive vice president and treasurer, as his successor.

British Better Fed Than Nazis, Survey Finds

Great Britain can maintain present rations of essetnial foods, the Agriculture Department said yesterday, even if sea warfare slashes imports to 40 per cent of average prewar levels for fats and 30 per cent for ham and sugar.

The department's survey found Britain faring better than Germany in essential foods, but said the war had boosted prices there but not in the Reich.

The department said that in the first war year British imports of food far exceeded the levels believed necessary to maintain present rations.

The department said it could make no estimate of import requirements for meats other than ham and bacon, since it cannot be assumed that domestic meat producduction will remain unchanged. It explained that home production of meat would be increased temporarily for some time, due to the necessity of reducing herds because of decreased feed supplies.

I got up very fast. I want to walk on the streets. For me, they seemed very different than on ordinary days, like big and clean sheets. I began to walk, but the cold weather put me very soon in a drug store. I drank a cup of coffee, and afterwards I felt much better.

I began to walk again. I wanted to take a little walk around the streets and I was doing that when I fell down. I try to stand up, but it was impossible. I fell down again. I was in the middle of the street. I think that everybody who was near me smiled. I was ashamed of myself.

I began to walk again, but when I did; I took much care.

It is very interesting to see the roofs of the cars covered by the snow; to see all the trees with a white clothing. Somebody said that all the good things are white, because white is the immaculate color. I think that this nice city was the most pure in the world. All things, the ground, the trees, the streets and avenues, the roof of the cars, all of them were white.

In Europe they have snow too. But all is quite different. There the snow must be red; it must be bespattered with the blood of the people that a crazy fellow is killing day by day. The snow in Europe must have a dirty red color.

I am sure that the people of this city must be happy to have snow. To have a white, a pure city, as yesterday.

Turkey, Britain Agree on Course

It is now established that Britain and Turkey have compared notes on the vital interests of each in the Balkans, and have decided to pursue a common policy there. What this means is perfectly obvious—that German aggression in the Balkans is going to be resisted by these two countries with complete agreement as to the role to be followed by each.

This is the reassurance to the Greeks that they will be supported to the hilt in continuing their campaign against Italy, with the fullest possible protection against a stab in the back by Germany. It is a notice to Hitler that if he pursues this plan he will thereby establish the second front which he has always dreaded—in the Balkans.

Two other significant facts emerge from Eden's visit—his four long interviews with the Yugoslav Minister, the reception this morning by the Soviet Ambassador, whom Sir Stafford Cripps is also seeing tomorrow, as well as Turkish Foreign Minister Saracoglu.

When Eden received the press informally this afternoon seeing together the English, American and Greek journalists as well as the correspondent of Tass Agency, he made clear that his remarks were off the record. From the ensuing general talk with questions and answers one got the impression that he was delighted with the success of his visit and that an entirely new common basis of confidence between the British and the Turks had resulted.

Last night's reception at the British Embassy is likely to prove of historic importance. It was attended by the majority of the Turkish cabinet as well as by leading Turkish officials and the heads of all diplomatic missions, excluding enemy powers but including the Japanese Ambassador. Eden was obviously in the best of spirits and remarked to this correspondent that his valuable 2½-hour audience with President Inonu rounded off excellent work of the morning conferences.

From authoritative quarters this correspondent learned last night that the Turks are as delighted as the British with the results of Eden's visit. It seems that Eden and Gen. Dill spoke with complete frankness, taking the Turks into their confidence concerning British plans for bringing the war to a successful conclusion for the final overthrow of Nazism and outlining the part they expected the Turks to play when the time should come.

Steel Capacity Is Sufficient, Roosevelt Says

America's steel producing capacity is adequate to meet all needs, defense and civilian, President Roosevelt declared yesterday in releasing what he termed an extremely encouraging report on the situation. It was made on his request by Gano Dunn, industrial engineer and senior consultant in the Office of Production Management production division.

After reviewing the study, the President declared that he did not think priorities would be imposed on steel at the present time. From the OPM, however, Priorities Director E. R. Stettinius, jr., hinted at such action for tungsten, shipments of which over the Burma Road are "now somewhat uncertain."

The steel report, according to a White House statement released following the President's press conference, revealed information never before known on steel capacity and demonstrated that it is "considerably higher than was generally realized."

New Measure Used

It concluded that there will be an excess ingot capacity of more than 10,000,000 tons this year and more than 2,000,000 tons in 1942 in the light of presently estimated civilian, foreign and direct defense requirements, the latter, however, being calculated at a figure considerably below peak World War demands.

The Dunn report, prepared at Mr. Roosevelt's request, used a new measure, termed "reliable capacity," which is 2½ per cent higher than rated steel capacity. Dunn said the increase was possible by using less time to effect necessary repairs during shutdowns.

Annual reliable capacity at the beginning of this year, Dunn calculated, was 87,576,000 tons of ingots, about 3,500,000 tons larger than previously supposed. Completion of additional facilities, now under construction, will bring total capacity to 91,124,718 tons by the end of 1941, he wrote.

Requirements Estimated

Dunn estimated that direct defense requirements of Army, Navy and Maritime Commission for this year would total 3,100,000 tons, that exports of steel, mainly to England and Canada, would come to 13,400,000 tons, and that civilian requirements, based on an estimated annual income this year of $80,000,000,000 would total 61,000,000 tons.

Combined, this would give requirements of about 77,500,000 tons of ingots, as against 87,576,099 tons of capacity, or a surplus of capacity of about 10,000,000 tons. If national income is lower, the report noted, civilian demand will be proportionately less and the surplus capacity proportionately larger.

With a national income of $87,000,000,000 in 1942, and a consequent civilian demand of 66,000,000 tons, plus increased exports to Britain and defense requirements upped to 8,500,000 tons, there will still be a surplus of more than 6,000,000 tons of capacity, the data showed.

Although the report did not mention it, observers were quick to point out that these figures, based on current defense schedules as presently appropriated for, did not purport to be applicable to a changed situation if the defense program were stepped up by new appropriations and if British requirements increased after passage of the British-aid bill.

The President added that he had asked Dunn to keep the report up to date at three-month intervals and declared that the study was probably the best thing that had ever been done on the subject of steel capacity.

Stettinius' warning on tungsten came with an announcement that he had begun "an investigation of the difficult situation" and that manufacturers had been urged to use substitutes wherever possible. Any developments which would cut off the large supplies that have come in the past from China would present "serious problems," he added.

House Passes Bill to Speed Housing Plan

By the Associated Press

A bill designed to speed up construction of homes for defense workers through Federal Housing Administration insurance of private mortgages won House approval yesterday.

Without an audible opposing vote, the House passed the FHA measure and sent it to the Senate after little debate, Republican opponents confining themselves mainly to questions about disposing of the new homes after the present emergency.

Chairman Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, of the House Banking Committee, told the House:

"It is the hope that a considerable part of the defense housing program can be done by private capital without loss to the Government. The plan is to have houses of a permanent nature that will not be thrown back on us after the emergency and that will be occupied temporarily by defense workers."

The bill would authorize the FHA to insure a maximum of $100,000,000 in mortgages on 90 per cent of the value of defense housing projects in areas where the President found an acute shortage exists or impends "which would impede national defense activities." The new authority would expire July 1, 1942.

Meanwhile, the Rules Committee considered for the fourth consecutive day another bill to double the present $150,000,000 program of Federal housing construction, mostly for industrial workers.

Charles F. Palmer, defense housing coordinator, told the committee that housing conditions apparently will become most serious in Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Detroit. He said that in the Philadelphia area, the prospects are that 160,000 new workers will be employed.

"I likewise believe that it would be pertinent to inquire whether they are mothers. For the sake of the race, I devoutly hope not."

Mrs. Dilling, who already was out on personal bond, and Mrs. Clara Nibberich, 45, of Chicago, were charged with disorderly conduct and released on deposit of $25 collateral for appearance in Police Court today.

FBI officials last night admitted that the request of Senator Glass had been received, but after a series of conferences indicated that the office of the Attorney General might have to decide whether the inquiry will be made.

Poetry Series Well Begun, Library Officials Are Jubilant

By Edward Ryan

Post Staff Writer

A poet's shy, friendly smile, and the music of his slow rolling voice found their echo yesterday in the jubilance of Library of Congress officials over the opening success of their new reading series, "The Poet and Democracy."

The poet was Robinson Jeffers, and the flavor of democracy he carried with him to Washington from his mountain home in California came alive in the poems he brought to read, and his grave, kindly way of talking about them.

His visit was arranged by Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, and the library. To meet him there came hundreds of Washingtonians, along with visitors from New York, and the States between. School children crowded into the auditorium on Thursday night along with Supreme Court justices, Government workers with Cabinet officers. The crowd overflowed into the Whittall pavilion of the library, where they heard the program through radio amplifiers. Scores of others were turned away.

Jeffers referred to the "Poet and Democracy" title, and declared "that is the happy condition of poets in this country."

The "special glory" of democracy, he said, is that "it provides the greatest freedom for the greatest number." He told more about that in his poem, "Shine, Republic," with the line "America . . . you were born to love Freedom."

While democracy is "congenial" to poetry, Jeffers said, "freedom is essential to it."

When there has been freedom, great poetry has been produced under all sorts of governments, Jeffers said, but the classical example of totalitarianism, Sparta, produced nothing but militarism, no art, no poetry, because there was no freedom."

Even at war, he said, Sparta was hardly superior to democratic Athens. The conflict between them finally ruined all Greece, he said, as the present war "is ruining all Europe."

Jeffers said he felt it a duty to say that at the end of this war, "Europe will be physically and morally exhausted," and it may be the destiny of America to carry culture and freedom across the twilight of another dark age.

He read half a dozen poems, written through the past four years as he watched a war coming, and in one of these, he said, "stark violence is still the sire of all the world's values."

"I believe this," he added after the poem, "but it will be a long time before the new values are formed."

Then, for awhile, he read poems about the mountains and ocean of his California home—about "the jagged country that nothing but a falling meteor will ever plow," about the "rocks shaped like flame," and trees, and "the throats of these living mountains."

At one point, he suggested that some of his readers might have wondered why so many hawks fly through his poetry. "The answer," he said, "is simply that there are so many hawks along his California coast."

He left reading after a while and talked more about the war.

"I have heard myself called a pessimist," he said. "I have spoken words of ill omen, but they are not words of despair."

"If we conjecture the decline of this civilization, it is because we hope for a better one.

"We are a tough race, we humans. We have lived through an ice age and many ages of barbarism, and we can live through this age of civilization and through our new agony of resurrection, and plot a new age."

"Our business is to live through everything, and keep alive, through anything, our ideal values, freedom, courage, mercy and tolerance."

Poet-Librarian Archibald MacLeish thanked Mr. and Mrs. Meyer, along with Dr. Joseph Auslander, and Mrs. Auslander, of the Library, for making possible Jeffers coming.

MacLeish said he was glad that a living American poet was there to read his poems in a library which is an agency of the Government.

Too often, said MacLeish, American libraries like American universities, had taken the position that the "only good poet is a dead poet, and sometimes that the only good poetry is dead poetry."

"It's not altogether desirable that the government of a democracy should ignore its posts as this Government has done in the past."

MacLeish said that following Jeffers in the "Poet and Democracy" series will be Robert Frost, the New England poet, on March 27. Other leading poets are to be invited during the spring, and a group of "younger" American poets will be asked to join in the series next fall and winter, officials said.

George Charges Aid Bill Filibuster

don't think the Senator wants to make a foolish spectacle of himself here on the floor, but he can if he wants to."

Wheeler cut it with "I have the floor."

"Yes, and you've had it for two weeks," retorted George.

"And I'll have it for two weeks more if I want it," Wheeler shot back.

"Then it is a filibuster," said George.

Wheeler denied it was a filibuster. Though he might hold the floor, he said that was not his intention. Then the dispute flared anew as the Montanan and the Georgian debated how the "value" of defense articles would be determined.

Earlier, Democratic Senators tangled in a political row harking back to the Chicago convention, whether it was "free and open," and the 1938 "purge" and the Senators now for the bill who were marked for defeat then. In the course of this, Senator Chandler (Democrat), of Kentucky, smilingly suggested that Wheeler himself might face a purge some day.

"He Might Get to You"

"He (the President) might get to you some time," teased Chandler, "and if all the (dictatorship) fears you express here are true, you won't have a chance."

"Let him try it," replied Wheeler, "and you come along with him."

As the leadership started sending in speakers to counteract opposition arguments, few Senators would forecast a definite vote date. With new speeches and at least four "repeats" scheduled, there appeared little likelihood that action on amendments would begin until well into next week.

Wheeler will speak again at noon today, concluding the first of two speeches he intends to make on the bill. Three brief speeches for the bill will follow by Senators Lucas, of Illinois; Tunnell, of Delaware, and Smathers, of New Jersey (all Democrats). Eastern and Western Senators were being sent in to counteract opposition charges that support comes mainly from "south of the Mason-Dixon Line."

Among Senators reported preparing second speeches against the bill for delivery next week were Nye, of North Dakota; Shipstead, of Minnesota (Republicans); Clark, of Missouri, and Reynolds of North Carolina (Democrats).

Maloney Asks Action

Opening yesterday's discussion, Senator Maloney called for "action—not debate" on the bill and warned: "The magnificent courage of Britain might falter if this country—through misguided action—should callously leave the Englishman to his fate.

While supporting the bill, Maloney urged action to bar use of convoys. He proposed a modification of the Ellender amendment to prohibit movement of United States land or naval forces through combat areas "except in time of war." Exemptions were proposed for military observers and naval vessels used for evacuation of refugee citizens. Under the Maloney modification, no restrictions whatever would be placed on United States naval or military movements in the Far East, where aggressive action by Japan is feared.

Wheeler followed Maloney with a prepared speech, which he was forced to leave constantly in the fire of debate.

Sees Invitation to War

The Montanan charged the bill would "strip us of our defenses, invite the Chief Executive to declare war and create a dictatorship." He denied the bill was a defense measure, or that it sprung from fear of a Hitler attack on the United States. He said it was drafted "by persons who, regardless of cost in lives, liberty or dollars, want desperately to help Great Britain and unspecified other nations."

Once, without mentioning names, he quoted: "In the words of the Psalms, 'The words of his mouth were smoother than butter but war was in his heart.'"

One supporter of the bill, Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, jumped into the melee on Wheeler's side. Tydings referred to methods used in the unsuccessful effort to defeat him in Maryland's 1938 primaries.

"I don't want to charge the President with wanting to be a dictator," said Tydings. "Yet everyone must admit that during the last eight years he has at times acted like one."

Senator George asked Wheeler what his political discussion had to do with the British-aid bill and Wheeler replied that purges "have something to do with the Senator from Georgia." George was reelected in 1938 over opposition from the President.

George said that was so long ago that he had forgotten all about it, that in supporting the lend bill he was "trying now to do something for my country."

Model of New Army Fighter Plane Stolen

Los Angeles, Feb. 28 (AP).—Officials of Manta Aircraft Corporation today disclosed the theft on Monday of a model airplane representing new ideas in Army fighter plane design.

David R. Davis, president, said the 6-foot model's value, $10,000, was incidental to its importance in the defense program. He said the model had been approved by Army aviation experts, and that the FBI and Army Intelligence were investigating.

French Ignore Tokyo Ultimatum

border hostilities began again, "it will not be a dispute between two countries, but will turn into a war against an enemy of East Asia which hinders the way of Asiatic nations toward creation of a co-prosperity sphere."

(According to reports at Saigon that could not be confirmed, 51 Japanese naval vessels of various classifications were in the Gulf of Siam and waters off southern Indo-China.

(Moreover, Japan is reported to have in northern Indo-China, aside from air bases, more than double the 6,000 troops allowed under last September's accord with the French—these ostensibly for prosecution of the war with China—and the airfield at Saigon, southern Indo-China, is said to have been converted by the Japanese into a nuclear air base.

(In Vichy, after a French cabinet meeting, it was announced merely that the French position on Indo-China had been decided. An official spokesman said France "is obligated to conserve the integrity of her empire by the terms of the armistice"—with Germany.)

Hours before the ultimatum expired it became apparent that no French reply would be forthcoming.

What is occurring is the first test of the East Asian leadership assigned to Japan by the three-power pact with Germany and Italy.

Apparently the French, for the moment at least, had found the price too high in Japan's so-called final compromise offer to settle the territorial dispute between Thailand and French Indo-China.

Knudsen Urges 'Cooling-Off' Period

labor tension at Henry Ford's Lincoln, River Rouge and Highland Park factories.

Violence broke out at the I. H. C. plant and three C. I. O. men were injured. Union men charged non-union workers blocked a door and threw shovels and bricks at C. I. O. men attempting to walk out. The company, however, charged that union men were going through the plant threatening others who did not want to quit their jobs.

Knudsen's memorandum also indorsed a section of a bill by Representative Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, providing that the United States Conciliation Service be called into a dispute as soon as it became evident that the two parties could not agree.

Would Forfeit Rights

The defense chief wrote, "After efforts of the conciliator have failed, I recommend the following:

"Notice of intent to strike on a defense contract shall be given only after all the employes in the plant have given their consent through a secret ballot conducted on the premises, under supervision of the conciliation service of the Department of Labor with a majority of not less than 60 per cent.

"After notice of intent to strike is served on the management and the Labor Department, a committee of fact-finding members of OPM will study the issue and give a report within ten days. Strike must be deferred until 30 days after report is submitted.

"Failure to comply will make strike unauthorized and will forfeit the manufacturer's and the union's rights before the National Labor Relations Board, until reinstated by the Board."

At the OPM it was understood that the proposal was made by Knudsen in his individual capacity and did not represent any official OPM labor policy. In previous oral testimony, Knudsen and Hillman spoke individually and Knudsen's memorandum was submitted as a supplement to his own verbal discussion.

Prospective developments in the Allis-Chalmers strike, which has tied up $45,000,000 in defense orders, are seen as likely to take place at a union meeting in Milwaukee on Monday. At that time, it was learned, Thomas will urge the union to accept a settlement memorandum proposed by the OPM two weeks ago and agreed to at that time by both union and management representatives. Subsequently, a rash of "interpretations" of the memorandum broke out and OPM hopes for settlement were dashed.

From the Labor Department, Secretary Perkins ordered James F. Dewey, ace conciliator, to Detroit to mediate the threatened Ford strike. C. I. O. auto workers, accusing the company of discrimination, have served notice of intent to call strikes at the three plants which employ about 95,000 men and have $148,500,000 in defense orders.

The Bethlehem strike ended yesterday when 3,000 cheering workers accepted a three-point program proposed by the OPM late Thursday night. Van A. Bittner, SWOC regional director, told the workers that the settlement represented "one of labor's greatest victories in this country."

Alfonso Dies; Rites in Rome Set for Monday

By Richard G. Massock,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Rome, Feb. 28.—Former King Alfonso XIII of Spain died today after 15 days of the agony of angina pectoris, and tonight his body lay in the hotel bedroom which for a decade had been his place of exile.

His weakened heart stopped at 11:50 a. m. (4:50 a. m. E. S. T.). Fifteen minutes before the end all that remains of his family had gathered about him—all save the Infanta Christina, who was at Turin awaiting the birth of another grandchild of the monarch.

Alfonso was lucid but spent and weary and could only look at them—at the estranged former Queen Victoria, at his son and designated heir to the throne of Spain, Don Juan; at his son Jaime and his daughter Beatrice.

It seemed to those about him that he was clearly resigned, and he died calmly and appearing unafraid. Even in the long agony of his last days it was clear that he had thought much of the throne which he had relinquished 10 years ago. For only a few days ago he asked intimates whether Juan was suffering much because of his father's condition.

"I hope he is bearing it well," Alfonso said. "For a king must be strong."

The funeral mass will be celebrated Monday in the Church of St. Mary of the Angels. The body will be taken afterward to the Spanish National Church here, St. Mary Monserrato, for provisional interment preparatory to his burial beside the ancient kings of Spain in the Escorial in Madrid.

Alfonso, who would have been 55 May 17, died comforted by the last solemn sacrament of the church, extreme unction. Luigi Cardinal Maglione, the papal secretary of state, brought the Pope's condolences, and Crown Prince Umberto, of Italy, came to express the sorrow of the Italian King and Queen. Then there came a succession of Italian and Spanish aristocrats—the latter already stiffly speaking of Don Juan as "His Majesty."

In the bedroom of the hotel, almost bare of furniture, the body stretched out upon the floor was draped with the rich symbols of the Catholic faith. Alfonso wore the snow-white robes which he alone in all the world could wear—the robe of the commander of all Spain's orders of chivalry.

Alfonso was king from his birth, May 17, 1886, and reigned until April 14, 1931—a period marked by turbulence and political unrest which finally broke into civil war in 1936.

Alfonso left Spain April 15, 1931, after signing a manifesto expressing his conclusion that anti-monarchist election results showed he no longer had the love of his people. But in his own estimate he remained King of Spain.

His final yielding, dated January 15, 1941, was a renunciation of the throne in favor of his third son, Don Juan. This announcement was issued February 13 when he already was under treatment for a heart condition.

Alfonso was the posthumous son of Alfonso XII, and was under the regency of his mother, Queen Maria Cristina, until at 16 he ascended the throne. He was married May 31, 1906, to the English Princess, Victoria Eugenia of Battenberg.

The wedding cost $10,000,000 but the day was marred by the first of eight attempts on Alfonso's life. A bomb, hidden in a bouquet, was thrown at the royal carriage after the wedding ceremony and 24 bystanders were killed. A splinter hit the King.

Alfonso was something of a playboy, with a fondness for dancing, polo, bull fights, yachting and fast driving.

Tragedy stalked his family.

His soldest son, Alfonso, Prince of Asturias and Count of Covandonga, died in Miami in 1938 after an automobile accident. He was a victim of hemophilia, hereditary affliction marked by the failure of blood to coagulate. His youngest son, Prince Gonzalo, bled to death in 1934 after minor injury in an automobile accident in Austria.

His second son, Prince Jaime, was born deaf. Because of this affliction Jaime renounced his rights to the succession.

$53,215 Raised By Boys Club In Fund Drive

The Metropolitan Police Boys' Club campaign to raise $100,000 to finance the organization in the coming year passed its halfway point yesterday with total subscriptions and pledges amounting to $53,215.

The campaign total was swelled $50 by Washington Western Union messengers, who sent their contribution to the report meeting yesterday by two of their number, Dick Nunnally, 17, of 705 Mount Vernon Place Northwest, and Jack Potts, 17, of 113 R Street Northwest. The two boys are honor campaigners in their group.

It was the fourteenth day of the campaign. The amount of money received was said to be $1,000 short of that received as of the same day of the campaign last year. The amount reported prior to yesterday's meting in the National Press Club, was $43,037. Total subscriptions obtained by all police units in the campaign was announced as $23,448.

The club was described yesterday by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, as a taxpayers' investment. Had the No. 1 criminals of the country been given a helping hand such as the club provides, they might have been saved from their deeds, Bishop Freeman commented.

The second speaker, S. B. Weston, assistant chairman, advisory committee, National Youth Administration, said the spirit and aims of the club compose the stuff democracy is made of. "If you provide such opportunities to youth they will make the most of them," he said. "You are winning victories for humanity every day," he said.

Rites Monday For R.E. Elgen, P. U. C. Chief

Riley Ellsworth Elgen, 59, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission since May 4, 1934, died unexpectedly yesterday at his home, 2022 Klingle Road Northwest. Services will be Monday at 2 p. m. at Hysong's funeral home, 1300 N Street Northwest, with burial at Cedar Hill Cemetery.

MR. ELGEN

A powerful figure in local utilities circles for nearly a decade, Mr. Elgen was first appointed to the commission in January, 1932, by President Hoover. His death leaves the three-man commission with a single member, Engineer Commissioner David McCoach, jr.

According to members of his family, Mr. Elgen arose early yesterday to get the morning newspapers. He then returned to his bedroom, where he was found dead later by a member of the family.

Since 1932, when he was appointed to fill an unexpired term as vice chairman of the commission, Mr. Elgen has received three successive appointments from President Roosevelt, each being for a three-year term. His last reappointment was on July 1, 1940.

Mr. Elgen was born on January 21, 1882, in Carroll County, Md., son of George F. and Josephine Belt Elgen. He was educated in the public schools of Maryland and received a B. S. degree at St. John's College, Annapolis, Md., in 1903.

Prior to his entry into Federal Government service as a valuation expert for the Interstate Commerce Commission in 1916, Mr. Elgen served many railroad companies. His first job after college was with the Baltimore & Ohio in 1903. He also worked with the New York Central & Hudson River Railroad and the Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic Railroad.

He served with the ICC until 1932, when he was appointed to the utilities commission. During his administration on the commission power rates have been annually reduced under the sliding scale system until the rates are now the lowest in the country for privately owned firms; the express bus system was devised and a sliding scale arrangement was worked out for the Washington Gas Light Co.

Since November 1, when Richmond B. Keech resigned as vice chairman of the commission for the corporation counsel's post, the commission has been operating with two members. It is understood the President has received recommendations from the District Commissioners for a successor to Keech. Prominently mentioned for the post is Hinman D. Folsom, a former assistant corporation counsel, who was assigned to the utilities commission some years ago. He was personally recommended by Mr. Elgen, who considered Folsom "one of the best informed in utilities matters."

Mr. Elgen was a member of the Society of American Military Engineers, Washington Society of Engineers, and the American Society of Civil Engineers. He had written a number of articles for national magazines.

Besides his wife, Mrs. Grace Donaldson Elgen, Mr. Elgen is survived by three children, Riley E., jr., Thomas and Grace Elgen.

Two Killed, Score Hurt as Snow and Ice Snarl Traffic in District Area

boundary, and to the North and West, the A. A. A. said. The Keystone Motor Club said there was 4 to 6 inches of snow on Maryland roads and 8 inches in New Jersey.

The Weather Bureau last night predicted partly cloudy and continued cold weather today. Snow is expected to stop falling some time today. Highest temperature will be about 28. Tomorrow will be fair and cold, a condition that will hold through the first part of the week, according to the bureau's extended forecast.

Weather Bureau forecasters said yesterday's storm was of greater intensity and of longer duration than had been anticipated. Washington, it was thought, would only feel the fringe of a storm that developed off Cape Hatteras Thursday night. This storm, while moving in a northeasterly direction spread over a wider area than was expected.

The storm was the worst experienced this winter in many areas and drifts of 5 and 6 feet were reported in rural areas of Delaware and New Jersey. Small craft scurried for shelter in the Atlantic and a group of fishing boats reported by radio to authorities at Wildwood, N. J., that they were battling snow-laden winds of gale force off the Virginia coast.

Storm warnings were posted from Eastport, Me., to Cape Hatteras and a disturbance of considerable intensity was reported centered about 100 miles east of Virginia Capes. Weather Bureau officials said the storm, accompanied by shifting gales, is moving northeastward and probably would strike the North Atlantic Coast during the night.

Snow, whipped by strong winds, was general throughout Atlantic seaboard States and those adjoining.

Washington's snowfall, beginning shortly before midnight Thursday, left two inches of snow in the city by midnight last night, the bureau said. The mercury dropped from 32 at the beginning of the storm, to 22 at 11 a. m., and hovered near 22 through the day. Temperature at 10 p. m. was 23.

Ice-coated streets caused about 50 minor traffic collisions in the District, police reported. The Capital Transit Co. alone kept 28 sand trucks operating all day and they were given orders to work until dawn. Bus and street car schedules were thrown back an hour, according to H. L. Musson, assistant superintendent in charge of transportation. He attributed most of the delays to stalled automobiles.

Injured as a result of the storm and treated in Washington hospitals were:

Edith Gallant, 21, 2310 Ashmead Place Northwest, suffered a brain concussion when she struck her head on the curb at Nineteenth Street and Virginia Avenue Northwest.

Jack J. Howe, 39, 630 Quintana Place Northwest, suffered a fractured left leg when pinned against the rear bumper of his car by a skidding automobile at Alabama Avenue near Naylor Road Southeast.

William Semmes, colored, 63, no fixed address, was overcome by the cold while working at the New Central Market, Fifth and K Streets Northwest.

Ebert Matthews, 50, of 203 Jackson Street, Hempstead, Long Island, was struck and seriously injured while standing beside his car on the Lee Highway at Centerville, in Fairfax County, Va.

Five persons were injured in a crash near Laurel, Md., on Washington-Baltimore Boulevard. They are Christian Hoffman, sr., of Belair, N. J., fractured skull; Christian Hoffman, jr., lacerations of the body; Charles Foldes, Hollis, Long Island, N. Y., possible fracture of the right ribs; Mrs. Lena Foldes, of Hollis, possible concussion of the brain and head lacerations; a driver in the other machine, Richard Klindt, 47, of 814 D Street Southeast, possible concussion of the brain and a possible fracture of the right little finger.

Mrs. George E. Wheeler, of Leominster, Mass., was taken to Georgetown Hospital for treatment of slight injuries suffered in an accident on the Rockville Pike.

Edward Bromwell, 64, of 1230 M Street Northwest, was treated for a fractured collarbone after a station wagon he occupied collided with a bus at Eleventh and F Streets Northwest.

William E. Holmes, 41, colored, 5210 Blair Street Northeast, was given first-aid treatment at Casualty Hospital after his automobile skidded into a telephone pole at Nineteenth and East Capitol Streets.

Three D. C. Men Seized, Charged With 3 Holdups

Three young Washington men were arrested last night by Arlington (Va.) police and charged with holding up the Washington Golf and Country Club, the Rosslyn Loan Co., and a D. G. S. grocery at Glebe Road and Lee Highway.

Police Chief Harry L. Woodyard said they confessed to the holdups, which netted a total of $430, and then Washington police questioned them concerning some 15 holdups in the District, believed to have been committed by a ring of three to five gunmen.

The suspects were listed as Albert Hamm, 21, of 1720 Thirty-fifth Street Northwest; Royal Jackson Lavis, 20, no fixed address, and an 18-year-old youth living in Klingle Road.

They were taken into custody in an automobile on Lee Highway between Falls Church and Rosslyn.

Ginger Rogers And Stewart Voted 'Oscars'

By Hubbard Keavy
Associated Press Writer

Hollywood, Feb. 28.—A nimble footed Charleston dancer turned dramatic and a lanky actor Hollywood once kept hidden like a case ace are the new queen and king of the movies.

Ginger Rogers and James Stewart are the newest winners of the awards for the year's best by the Academy of Motion Pictures Arts and Sciences.

Ginger was better than any of her acting sisters in 1940, her fellows believe because of her portrayal of "Kitty Foyle."

And Stewart impressed them by his work in "The Philadelphia Story."

They, as well as a score of others, were called to the podium of a banquet hall, jammed with celebrities and fellow workers last night, to be handed statuettes a foot high which have been dubbed Oscars.

"Rebecca" was the year's best motion picture, in the opinion of the Academy's 12,000 voters.

The award for the best performance by a supporting actor went to Walter Brennan, who played Judge Bean in "The Westerner." It was old stuff for him—he won in 1936 for "Come and Get It," and in 1938 for "Kentucky."

Jane Darwell was voted the best supporting actress for her characterization of Ma Joad in "The Grapes of Wrath." That picture's director, John Ford, won the directorial award. He also won in 1935 for "The Informer."

The red-haired and vivacious Ginger was competing against some of the movies' best talent, including Bette Davis, who has won two awards, and Katharine Hepburn, a one-time winner. Bette was nominated for "The Letter" and Hepburn for "The Philadelphia Story." Also named were Martha Scott for "Our Town" and Joan Fontaine for "Rebecca."

Stewart's competitors were Charlie Chaplin, "The Great Dictator," Raymond Massey, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," Henry Fonda, "The Grapes of Wrath," and Laurence Olivier, "Rebecca."

GINGER WEEPS OVER 'OSCAR'—The excitement was too much for Ginger Rogers (left) when she was awarded the Motion Picture Academy's "Oscar" for her characterization of Kitty Foyle in the picture by that title. The actress' mother, Mrs. Lelia Rogers (center), also shed tears and it was left to Producer David Hempstead to quiet both happy women

Mr. Sherwood, 58, was born in Washington, and was the son of Capt. Henry Sherwood, former postmaster.

Masonic funeral services will be held today at 3 o'clock at the Hines funeral home, Fourteenth and Harvard Streets Northwest. Burial will be in Washington Memorial Park.

G. H. Sensner, Educator, Dies In Miami Crash

George H. Sensner, 66, science and mathematics teacher at Sidwell Friends School for 35 years, was killed instantly Thursday in an automobile accident in Miami, Fla., it was learned here yesterday.

Funeral services will be held at 10:30 a. m. today in Hines chapel, 2901 Fourteenth Street Northwest. Burial will be in Fredericksburg, Va.

Friends and associates at the Sidwell School who will be honorary pallbearers include J. Austin Stone, Albert E. Rogers, Raymond H. Powell, Charles W. Wannan, Robert S. Lyle, Howard W. Bartram, John E. Fletcher, Grover L. Hartman, Anthony Latona and W. W. Arbuckle.

Known to hundreds of present and former Sidwell students as "Uncle George," Mr. Sensner had continued active teaching until the close of the last school year. He suffered a breakdown last summer, friends said, and he had been in Florida since shortly after Christmas.

Friends at the school recalled that Mr. Sensner had been a star pitcher for the Georgetown baseball team, and had kept a steady interest in sports at the Sidwell school.

A native of Washington, Mr. Sensner was the son of Commander George W. Sensner, U. S. N., native of Baltimore. He started his teaching career at 19, with the Emerson Institute here, and continued at Emerson until 1905 when he joined the Friends School faculty. He lived at the Clifton Terrace Apartments.

He was a member of the Federal Schoolmen's Club. Surviving are a sister, Miss Bessie Sensner, also of the Clifton Terrace Apartments, and a brother, Charles Frederick Sensner, of El Paso, Tex.

Mrs. Mead Dies In N. Y.; Leader In 'New Thought'

Mrs. Mary Robbins Mead, 81, for many years a winter resident of Washington, died yesterday at Watkins Glen, N. Y. She was a teacher, lecturer and writer in the New Thought movement, which seeks to change morbid thinking into "constructive thought."

Mrs. Mead, widow of Darwin W. Mead, of Oswego, N. Y., devoted a great part of her life to the philosophy which followers claim "cancels the cause of disease and death." The movement was founded in the early 1900's by the late Mrs. Mary E. T. Chapin.

Each fall for nearly 25 years Mrs. Mead came to Washington and gathered a circle of persons interested in her teachings.

Funeral services will be at Holden Hall, her Watkins Glen home, at 2 p. m. Monday. Burial will be in Lakemont (N. Y.) Cemetery.

GHA Client Tells Of Mistreatment

only ordered X-ray pictures taken.

About a half hour after he left the room, she went on, Dr. Raymond E. Selders, GHA staff surgeon and the doctor she had wanted in the first place, came in and arranged for her immediate transfer to Garfield Hospital, where the GHA doctor had temporary privileges to practice.

"At Garfield, Dr. Selders looked after me every day," said the witness. "He was just splendid."

There were several chuckles in the courtroom. In his daily cross-examination of Government witnesses, Defense Counsel William E. Leahy has been attempting to show that Dr. Selders' professional competence was questionable.

Leahy's cross-examination brought out that, upon her arrival at Emergency Hospital Miss Abbot tried in vain for an hour to reach a GHA doctor and that Dr. Marbury reached her bedside before Dr. Selders the following morning. The Abbott incident precipitated an angry letter from Maj. Gist Blair, since deceased but then president of Emergency, to Clarence A. Aspinwall, president of Garfield, the Government demonstrated after the witness left the stand.

John Henry Lewin, of prosecution counsel, read to the jury Maj. Blair's letter, written the same day Miss Abbott was transferred to Garfield.

Feared Criticism

Explaining that the woman was given first aid in the emergency room (Miss Abbott denied this on the stand) and that Dr. Selders' request to be permitted to treat her was rejected because he was not on Emergency's courtesy list, Maj. Blair concluded.

"We shall be under obligation to you for a full explanation of the circumstances under which this patient has been permitted to enter Garfield since it is not unlikely that we may be criticized for having declined to care for the patient . . . when Garfield apparently is willing to take the patient."

Aspinwall's reply pointed out that Dr. Selders had had temporary privileges at Garfield. It also made an interesting disclosure, namely, that the hospital's board of directors had withdrawn these privileges on January 25, but Dr. Selders had not been notified of this action when he brought Miss Abbott to the institution two days later, hence he was permitted to treat her.

Another key witness, Dr. Allan E. Lee, testified on circumstances surrounding the treatment in Garfield Hospital of Miss Mary Frances Stuart in November, 1937. Now Mrs. John M. Maury, jr., and a resident of Charlottesville, Va., the woman preceded Dr. Lee on the witness stand.

Doctors Argued

In substance, Dr. Lee testified that he examined Miss Stuart (Mrs. Maury) after she was stricken suddenly ill in her home and arranged for her immediate transfer to Garfield Hospital. There she was operated on by Dr. Herbert H. Schoenfeld, a District Medical Society member, after a discussion between Dr. Lee and Dr. Schoenfeld.

Objections by the defense prevented the jury's hearing what the gist of this discussion was, though it is known to have concerned Miss Stuart's status as an employe of Group Health Association.

Mrs. Maury told the jury she received no treatment at Garfield while awaiting the arrival of a surgeon, whose choice she had left to Dr. Lee, then a GHA doctor, but who resigned the following month.

Finally, she said, Dr. Schoenfeld came in and examined her, then departed. He returned in "about an hour," she testified, during which interim she received no treatment.

Dr. Lee testified that on October 30, 1937—two days before GHA opened the doors of its I street clinic—he wrote his letter of resignation from the District Medical Society, one of the defendants on trial. Six weeks later, however, he quit the GHA staff after the DMS had begun expulsion proceedings against him.

"I left the Group Health Association staff," he said, "because I felt that, on account of the controversy, I was wasting time that I should have been devoting to sick people."

"It was this controversy, then, which was the cause of your leaving GHA?" asked Grant W. Kelleher, for the prosecution.

"Yes," the witness replied.

"But wasn't it true that you preferred private to group practice?" Leahy asked, in pursuance of his argument that the latter is less desirable.

Again Dr. Lee replied in the affirmative, thus apparently giving opposing counsel a draw.

If you suffer from "Menu Phobia" and mealtime is your husband's heckling time . . . salvation awaits you at Loew's Palace tomorrow, where Prudence Penny appears in "PENNY TO THE RESCUE."

Babies For Sale

The bill to curb the activities of baby brokers, first drafted a year ago, has been approved by the Board of Public Welfare. It is intended to put an end to this unfortunate practice by requiring licenses of all agencies that place children for adoption, and by forbidding acceptance of profit for such services. Baby brokers, little known to the general public until their activities were described last year by The Post, trade in misery and thereby produce more misery. Their chief function is to provide privacy and care for unmarried mothers in return for the right to market the babies. This unsupervised traffic has resulted in the surrender of children to foster parents irresponsible or otherwise unfit; in the payment of high fees by adopting couples for children who later are found to be incurably diseased in mind or body; and frequently, no doubt, in unnecessarily separating mother and child.

Legislation to control this haphazard traffic in human life is urgently needed. It should be recognized, however, that enactment of this bill would create a new public responsibility. Certainly there would be some increase in adoption cases to be handled by the Welfare Board and by philanthropic agencies. Although the case load of the board already is too high, the bill does not call for more personnel. Funds for 32 additional workers were requested in the 1942 budget estimates, but the appropriation bill as submitted to Congress provides for only two. Provision for proper care of unmarried mothers will also have to be made. The Children's Protective Association and welfare officials have been doing this work on a small scale, with emphasis on keeping the mother and child together until their future can be worked out. Legislation is needed to put that work on a permanent basis.

Plea For The Chains

Two thoughts are suggested by the plan for the Federal incorporation and regulation of chain stores and other large-scale food-distributing organizations engaged in interstate commerce. It is a reaction against the indiscriminate "break 'em up" attitude toward big business. It is yet another farm plan to add to the many which by this time must have made Americans think of the farm problem as among our political perennials. This latter aspect of the plan, which has been suggested to the TNEC by several experts of the Department of Agriculture, is what concerned the sponsors.

The war has accelerated the long-time downward trend of agricultural exports to such an extent that we are now faced with almost a complete loss of foreign markets. The return of peace may reopen some closed outlets, it is true, but there is no expectation that it will bring a solution of our farm-surplus problem. Consequently the marketing experts of the Department of Agriculture are concentrating attention more and more upon plans for expansion of domestic markets. Of course, the soundest and the surest way of encouraging increased consumption of farm products is to reduce prices to consumers. The only way that can be done, however, without further depressing prices paid to farmers themselves (and thereby running counter to the objectives of the AAA) is to cut marketing costs. Certainly there is ample room for a reduction of distributive costs which are estimated to absorb on the average 58 cents of every dollar that the consumer spends for food.

This is where the chains come in. They are efficient and less costly marketing systems of farm products. They could become more efficient and less costly if there were Federal incorporation and regulation of chain stores and other large-scale food-distributing organizations engaged in interstate commerce. The dissolution of large distributors, on the contrary, leads to an increase in food costs and profit margins. It is concluded, therefore, that "public intervention should be in the direction of control of the monopolistic elements rather than their dissolution." Furthermore, the experts point out that a great many of the laws passed in recent years for the alleged purpose of preserving small-scale enterprises have actually raised marketing costs and increased prices paid by consumers. Examples of such legislation are the so-called "fair trade" laws passed by 44 States legalizing resale price maintenance and the levying of penalty taxes on chain stores.

Thus the recommendation of the agricultural experts is an indirect indictment of much that has been done by the Federal and the State governments. Insurance of the survival of small-scale distributors has been sought by resort to legislative devices that "penalize development of the most efficient methods of marketing." What is needed is a better balanced regulatory program to suppress unfair competition by chain stores and other large-scale marketing units while preserving the economic gains of mass distribution. As the experts say, "there is no reason to follow a different policy for mass distribution than for mass production. In so far as both flow from the same causes, and have the same general economic advantages, and are subject to the same abuses of monopoly control, they should be dealt with alike." We agree.

Money And Votes

The Hatch Act has come out second best in its tussle with the big spenders of the Republican and Democratic Parties. Congress thought it had limited the outlays of each party to $3,000,000 last year, but the parties succeeded in spending many times that sum without violating the letter of the law. However, a special grand jury, which found that "a very large sum of money" was collected and spent, has returned its indictments against the law rather than against the politicians who slipped through its wide loopholes. Probably the spirit of the law was violated. Yet testimony before the grand jury shows a good deal of uncertainty as to whether the purpose of the limitation on campaign expenditures was to decentralize party financing or to put a definite limit on the amount of money that could be spent for any one candidate. In any event the effect was to split up campaign contributions into many different funds, without imposing any effective restraints upon the use of money to influence voters. Obviously the law must be amended if it is to curb unrestrained political spending.

Two important recommendations are made by Maurice M. Milligan, special assistant to the Attorney General, on the basis of evidence presented to the grand jury. To make the $3,000,000 limitation upon the expenditures of any national committee effective, he would forbid all other organizations to spend money in behalf of a party candidate without the consent of the national committee directing the campaign. To illustrate: Had this plan been in effect last year, Democratic clubs for Wendell Willkie could not have functioned without becoming "a branch or subsidiary" of the Republican National Committee. That would be a harsh limitation. Many citizens eager to support a candidate might find it impossible to do so without taking orders from an organization that is objectionable to them. The effect might easily be to encourage each small faction to put up a candidate of its own and thus weaken our two-party system which is particularly well adapted to the American form of government.

A much more workable suggestion is that which would put a definite limit on the amount which any one individual might contribute to any and all political organizations during a single year. The present limit of $5,000 was ineffective in the 1940 campaign because some wealthy persons made gifts of that sum to many different organizations supporting the same candidate. The influence of wealth upon a campaign would be properly and effectively minimized if the total sum of any individual's gifts were fixed. Mr. Milligan does not suggest the figure at which this limitation should be placed, but he thinks $5,000 is too low. Something can be accomplished by thus applying a rigid ceiling to individual campaign contributions and by full publicity of party expenditures. Beyond that it seems doubtful whether rigid prohibitions are feasible. Certainly Congress will want to investigate carefully the dangers of trying to fit our fluid political machinery into a definite pattern before it gives two national committees control over virtually all the money that could be spent in a campaign.

Unhappy King

King Alphonso XIII, in whose veins commingled the blood of both Bourbons and Habsburgs, shared fully the defects and the qualities of those royal lines. He had physical courage, a good-natured manner, curious and inordinate cravings for food, sport, entertainment and excitements. He had a certain shrewdness and a gift of expediency, which, unfortunately, he mistook for political wisdom. What was said long ago of the French Bourbons, that they "never learned and never forgot," might also have been said of him. In his years of exile he never ceased to believe in his restoration, and it was not until a few weeks ago, when the finger of death was already on him, that he signed an abdication in favor of his third son, Prince Juan.

Whether, given the same set of circumstances, a wiser monarch could have averted the fearful fate which has befallen the once proud and mighty Kingdom of Spain, is an open question. Alfonso was a posthumous heir, and his heritage was an already precarious throne and a dying empire. The Carlist wars had reduced Spain to a condition not far from outright anarchy. Even then the irreconcilable forces which belatedly burst forth into the bloody conflict of 1936-39 were gathering momentum. The Cuban insurrection already was in full tide. Thus, while Alfonso was still an uncrowned child, the last vestiges of the empire, on which Charles V had boasted the sun never set, collapsed under Dewey's guns at Manila and Sampson's at Santiago. The marvel is not that he lost his throne at last. It is that, through crisis after crisis, he clung to it for nearly 30 years. Perhaps the explanation is that Alfonso was the single symbol of national unity in a land torn by fierce philosophic and social hatreds.

Good Work By OPM

The prompt settlement of the Bethlehem Steel strike at Lackawanna is a tribute to the speed with which the Office of Production Management went into action. From this distance it is impossible to determine whether the union was disappointed in the response to its strike call or whether the company feared the consequences of standing pat. In any event both union and company hastened to accept the reasonable proposal of the OPM for an immediate resumption of operations in this vital defense plant. Neither side was willing to accept responsibility for rejection of the moderate OPM plan.

Many differences between the company and the union are yet to be settled. The achievement of the OPM arises from the fact that it brought about full resumption of work while these differences are being negotiated. To this extent the agreement also appears to be a victory for the union, for it had previously complained that it had no access to company officials for the discussion of grievances. If the company's promise to hold a conference for the adjustment of differences means future acceptance in good faith of the collective bargaining principle, a notable gain will be recorded from the standpoint of the public as well as from that of labor.

The success of the OPM in this instance carries no assurance, however, that the defense program will not be further menaced by walkouts. The Allis-Chalmers tie-up is still in effect, and a walkout in three Ford plants working on immense defense orders is threatened. Even if OPM Director Knudsen and his associate, Sidney J. Hillman, can apply sufficient pressure to bring strikes to an end, they cannot be expected to devote their time and energy to that purpose. The fact that they were compelled personally to intervene in this case is sufficient warning that some more effective means of handling walkouts in defense plants is needed.

Riley E. Elgen

For a community devoid of any control over its own government Washington has been very fortunate in the selection of many of its public servants. That fact stands out with particular force today as the city mourns the loss of Riley E. Elgen, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission. Mr. Elgen was a public servant of high caliber. It was not his disposition to seek the spotlight. He worked quietly and maintained a judicial temperament in every aspect of the task of regulating public utilities in the District. His efforts were nonetheless effective, as is shown by the city's favorable utility rates, and by the general improvement in its transportation system.

Mr. Elgen was appointed to the P. U. C. in 1932 after long experience as a railroad engineer and as an expert for the Interstate Commerce Commission. He is entitled to part of the credit for the merger of the city's streetcar companies and for the rerouting of lines which followed that consolidation. Under his chairmanship, too, the commission persistently applied its sliding-scale formula to electric power rates with notable savings to the public. In 1935 the same principle was successfully applied to gas rates. It will not be an easy task to fill his place on the P. U. C. Yet a successor ought to be chosen promptly, for Mr. Elgen's death leaves the commission without a chairman and with only one member.

THE GYPSY WAGONS

I remember the gypsy wagons
In lonely country places,
And camp fires under the willows—
And the dark wistful faces.

Against the quiet colors
Barbaric tints and laughter!
Young dreams were inclined to follow
What gypsies wandered after.

The shaggy little horses
Were glad enough to stay—
But the gypsies begged for silver
And the wagons creaked away.

All the rainbows to follow . . .
And never a pot of gold!
Only the dark hands reaching
For a silver piece to hold!

America First Committee

I recently paid a visit to the office of the America First Committee to find out just what are the aims of that organization. I was given numerous folders, one of which started out, "We believe in an impregnable defense for America," a worthy, if a rather vague, general statement calculated to meet with 100 per cent approval on the part of the American people. I asked one of the people there just what was meant by it. He, thinking I meant the exact quantities of guns and ships, replied that the committee did not recommend how many planes, guns, tanks or ships would be needed; these affairs should be left to the naval and military experts. I then asked how far the defense went; did it include Canada? Oh, yes. The bases we received from England? Oh, yes. The Panama Canal? Oh, yes. Bases in Central and South America to protect the Canal? Oh, yes. I said I thought the committee was getting pretty far afield; just how far did they propose to go? He replied that with bases in Brazil we could consider ourselves safe.

We spoke of a few other things, and then the spokesman said, "Right now, of course, our main job is to defeat the lend-lease bill." I replied that while there were certain features of the bill I was not wild about I certainly was for it in general, and then I added that it was strange that the America First Committee was against it since all the military and naval experts in the Government apparently were for it, and he had just said that the details of defense should be left to them.

This committee's arguments, like those of the No Foreign War Committee, or Senator Wheeler, or any of the isolationists, do not hold water if prodded too far. They all want security without any sacrifice entailed.

Curiously enough, the committee believes in aid to England, but my spokesman denied any need on our part of British sea power. I thought this strange, too, since the naval experts certainly have stressed this need very thoroughly indeed. I was not able, however, to find out why the committee advocates aid to England, if not for the reason that we are dependent upon the British fleet for our security in the Atlantic.

For Postoffice Notaries

Being one who has recently received his Selective Service questionnaire, I ran into a rather small but evidently a very necessary snag. Told to have my statements notarized at a postoffice, I went to a nearby branch on Pennsylvania Avenue near Nineteenth, only to be told to go to "the" postoffice.

In behalf of the other young men who, like myself, find it necessary to have their questionnaire notarized, I should like to suggest that every branch postoffice station have an authorized notary. It would considerably facilitate these important matters and at the same time cope more adequately with a necessary situation.

Senator Walsh's Speech

I have just read Senator Walsh's speech to the people. It seems Senator Walsh is the only one in Washington who works for the people who sent him there. States make a mistake when they don't send men to Washington who work for the people. Let's all take heed of the Senator's speech. This lease-lend bill should be defeated now.

Article III, Section 3

Article III, section 3, of the Constitution specifically states: "Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort." It seems to me this rather neatly and completely takes care of the cases of propagandists, "fellow travelers," confused socialists and such like who so far forget their allegiance as to use their talents and wealth in undermining the system which supports them.

Senatorial Signposts

We have several Senators who have traveled a road with signposts of their own making as follows: No war, phony war, real war but none of our affair; that Europe is being made a shambles is no concern of ours; we will vote billions for defense, for that is a good political gesture, but we will obstruct the implementation of the billions.

As they have traveled along this false road, these Senators have lost no opportunity to play upon the fears of American mothers.

Courage And Tenacity Shown By Letters From England

I am venturing to send you several letters from England which either I or friends have received. They are not, of course, given in full, for all personal references, which could be interesting only to the persons concerned, have been cut out. They seem to me to be excellent in the manner in which they express the morale of the British people during their ordeal, and also seem to be of especial interest while the discussions over the lend-lease bill are going on.

SUSAN N. PULSIFER.

The planes came continuously for four and one-half hours or more and the noise of barrage and explosions was terrific. The children sat under the stairs with us in the dark, to avoid risk of open windows causing curtains to be blown aside. They played all kinds of guessing games, laughing and talking and telling stories, not in the least perturbed by the inferno going on outside. Yet, oddly enough, at the beginning, they simultaneously began to sing "Loving Shepherd of Thy Sheep, Keep Thy Lamb in Safety Keep." But they couldn't remember more than the first verse and soon began to tell stories and invent games. Finally about halfway through the raid, they fell fast asleep and slept through the rest of it!

I am so glad they are beginning to show they are truly British. They were not afraid!

Almost the same story can be repeated hundreds of times over! What magnificent qualities are brought out by catastrophe! There is still much left in our race of the spirit of the heroes of the Battle of Malden. It is still good to be alive and part of a world struggle of good against evil.

P.

My eldest brother lives at . . . in a small valley by the village, and my sister-in-law, writing to me on December 29, tells me one night there was a terrific noise—400 incendiary bombs, 5 high explosives and 3 oils, had dropped on either side of their house at a distance of less than 200 yards—a pure miracle, no one hurt. Next day they were picking them up wholesale in the kitchen garden and hen-run. They had 14 refugees staying with them who came in and sat on the stairs with them. They then had a glorious party, inviting all their friends in the village—many of them distinguished Poles and Czechs. They had smoked salmon and foie gras, and wonderful hors d'oeuvres of all kinds, and fruit salads and eclairs—everything unrationed. My brother brought out his best champagne, and young and old danced till late, dressed in their gala evening clothes, which none of them had worn for a long time; and it did them all good. They are so thankful for their miraculous escape.

It is miserable every evening thinking that some town or village is going to have a devil of a time. You hear the planes droning about and wonder what is going to happen. However, there is lots to be thankful for. We are gradually getting through the winter. Every now and then there is a touch of spring in the air and one gets a feeling of uplift which threats of invasion, gas and all the rest of it cannot quite destroy.

E.

We are very busy cutting out and making up the lovely warm material sent from the United States. Children's clothes, for those who have been bombed, seem the most urgently needed at the moment.

We have to be in our shelters by 6:30 p. m. now, and don't move out before 7 a. m. To get into a nightie and a real bed would feel like heaven! We are all a little tired with the long nights in the shelters—some nights one sleeps from time to time—other nights the gun barrage is terrific.

I am longing to hear from you, but so far have received no American Christmas mail at all. H. and O. always write, just as you do, but not a line has come from anyone. A letter from outside cheers us more than you can realize.

Everyone's heart is daily gladdened and helped beyond words by America's wonderful cooperation in our great struggle.

The food problem is becoming more and more acute, but they say there is oatmeal in quantities, and we could certainly live on porridge. Lord Woolton asked the people of England last week, "Would you sooner have meat or Bardia?" You know that our answer was Bardia. America would lend us ships later on for food, I am sure. Prices are being controlled, so we won't starve!

B.

London, Jan. 8.

There is almost an uneasy feeling in the air at present—the thought of invasion. We are all prepared, though, and whatever we have to go through everyone will "stay put" and "stand firm." We have all been asked to have two full weeks' food supply in our cupboards. All the people are simply marvellous helping one another to get what is necessary. Food is certainly a problem now, and prices, although the necessities are controlled, are very high. Never mind, there is plenty of oatmeal in the country, and one could easily live on it.

The Post Impressionist

Hey-Rub-a-Dub-Dub

I wonder if many people realize how much good, clean fun can be had in a bathtub? I don't mean sailing boats like children. I mean fun for adults.

Take my attorney friend—let's call him Harry and say that he used to live in Helena, Mont., because that's the truth. Harry had the only double-decker bath tub I ever saw. His bath room was much more than just a place to wash and polish the body. It was practically a porcelain playground. First, just for him. Then his family became fond of the place: later even the servants sought to join in the fun, and finally it became something of a meeting place for members of the old Helena-Dodge-the-Earthquake-and-Sheriff Club.

It all goes back to the winter when the highest official temperature (official, mind you) during 28 consecutive days and nights was 17 below zero.

Harry was full of hot, tropical Sam McGee-type blood, and sub-zero weather cut his cottonfield cuddled cuticle to the quick—especially when something happened to the furnace and his house would become almost as frigid as the world outside.

So Harry took to dallying for hours in his tub, which he filled with steaming hot water. He put off going to the office until nearly noon. At first, he just lay immersed to his chin in the warming water and pondered problems, professional or personal.

Then one morning, Harry read the mercury had tobogganed to a terrifying 62 below zero (official) the night before.

Harry dived into the hot tub, taking the paper along. He finished reading it there. He liked the idea. Reading in the tub became part of the daily routine. It was just a step from there to daily breakfast in the tub. A special tray kept the water from splashing into the coffee.

Things were so cozy and warm in the bathroom, Harry's devoted wife dodged the chill morning air by joining him there for a morning beverage. The room was large, so she moved in a comfortable chair.

Junior and Sis found out, of course, and laid siege to the locked door. It was easier to give in than to listen to their din. They added a lot of confusion to the bathroom scene. Junior brought his boats to sail in Daddy's hot water. Patient Harry didn't mind—until he scrubbed off some skin when he picked up a sharp-keeled toy and used it for soap.

But Junior stuck to his new-found ocean. He put on his swimming trunks and got in with Dad. It was more fun playing admiral that way. Sis put on her trunks and got in, too. She wanted to be shipwrecked on an island. Harry was the island, and she and Junior sat on him.

Harry's wife retired to a far corner of the room. She got all the morning paper now. Harry had difficulty just bathing; he gave up reading and eating in the tub.

Last to join the happy group was Pal, an all-black Labrador about the size of a large collie or shepherd dog. Pal was wonderful at retrieving ducks, but he was much too big to fit into a tub with Harry and Junior and Sis and their assorted toys.

That's when Harry hit on the idea of a double-decker tub. An engineer from Butte came over and built it. It was a marvelously clever porcelain masterpiece when he got through.

At first, Harry used the bottom tub and put Junior and Sis and the toys in the "top ocean." But that still left Pal to contend with. It was hard to convince Pal there were no real ducks in the water. So Harry bailed out of the "bottom ocean" and took to the top. That left all the water below for the kids and Pal. It also gave Harry more light to read by, and kept little fingers and huge paws out of his breakfast tray.

All this bathtub fun, of course, was strictly for the family. We members of the Dodge-the-Earthquake-and-Sheriff Club didn't share in the thing until St. Patrick's Day—and then, only by accident.

Helena observes Lent with some striciness, but takes time out to honor the great Irish saint. We of the club that year paid fitting tribute to Patrick and were preparing to do as well by the fiddler to compensate for our dancing. It was Harry, himself—and how he later rued the decision—who invited us to come out and use the double-decker tub to freshen up for the "day after."

The faucet frivolity charmed us. The whole thing was so much fun we added a special day's celebration again in honor of St. Patrick. And when the season of penitence was over, the club had a truly gala regatta in Harry's bathroom.

Harry's wife got a little irked at this point. The laundry and new towel bill bent the budget rather badly. But she was a good sport and didn't put her foot down too flatly. (She settled for a new fur coat.)

The fun went on and on, and probably would have until the club found a new and merrier place. The spring thaw probably would have flooded us all out of the place any way.

But I will always think that what broke up the whole business was the shock Harry got the morning the maid walked in the bathroom and, with complete unconcern, informed the submerged Harry he was wanted on the telephone.

"Fun's fun, but you have to draw the line somewhere," Harry explained at the club's downtown headquarters that day.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

On Being Too Current

FROM DR. ROBEY'S remarks on his inquiry for the National Association of Manufacturers it appears that all would be well with the study of the social sciences in high schools if only the textbooks were written in a spirit which he approved, expressed opinions which he thought were sound, and were done in what he would regard as a scholarly and competent manner. Thus Dr. Robey has precipitated a quarrel which is insoluble by rational discussion. For who is to decide whether Dr. Robey on the one hand, or Dr. Rugg and the authors of some six hundred books, are the better judges of what is sound, proper, scholarly and competent?

LIPPMANN

But worse than that, Dr. Robey's red herring throws us off the scent in seeking the solution to the real and difficult problem of how to prepare young people for judging the debatable issues of the world in which they are going to live. It is no solution of this educational problem to say that they should be taught Dr. Robey's hotly debated opinions about the world we now live in rather than, for example, Dr. Rugg's hotly debated opinions.

THERE ARE REASONS for thinking, so at least it seems to me, that Dr. Robey and Dr. Rugg are the victims of the same educational fallacy, that, in Mr. Dooley's words, they are as far apart as the two poles and as much alike. For they assume that the way to prepare the young for the future is, as soon as they have just about learned to read and write, to furnish them views about the present. Is this assumption correct? If it is, we had better resign ourselves to an interminable struggle among parties, pressure groups, and ideological sects for the control of the school curriculum. Instead of an education which transmits and perfects the culture of Western men, we shall have a new education every time there is a shift in the winds of political opinion. And we shall make the schools an arena in which the question to be decided is whether Dr. Robey's current doxy or Dr. Rugg's current doxy is to be the currently official orthodoxy.

Yet neither logic nor experience justifies the assumption that a high school student will be prepared for his adult world by offering him the debatable opinions of the world in which we are adults. No one begins to study medicine by attempting to form an opinion on the curative properties of insulin and sulfapyridin. There are too many other things in physiology and chemistry to be learned before the medical student can even begin to appreciate the problem, much less to reach a conclusion about it. But somehow when it comes to educating the citizen, we of this generation have been persuaded to think we can run before we learn to walk, that we can begin our education at what is really the end of an education, that is to say with views about the latest and obscurest issues of the contemporary world.

THUS WE HAVE departed from the educational practice of 2,000 years and have fallen into the fallacy of supposing that the study of contemporary issues is the best education. Surely this a fallacy. For nothing is so quickly out of date as a contemporary issue, and there is no ground for thinking that Dr. Robey's "sound views" or Dr. Rugg's "enlightened views" about the current controversies will be any more significant or pertinent twenty years hence than they were twenty years ago. This effort to be so contemporary, so current, so much up-to-the-minute, so close to headlines, is dubious enough among journalistic commentators. Among educators it is a disease. It is a way of confusing the judgment of the young by inviting them to believe they can make judgments before they have learned the art of making judgments.

Only very recently has it come to be supposed that the way to prepare a student for the issues of his life is to begin by studying the issues that preoccupy his parents. The founders of the American Republic were extraordinarily well-educated men: to compare their discussion of public questions with ours is not flattering to ourselves. In what textbooks did they study political science? Did the men who drafted the Constitution in Philadelphia in 1787 study textbooks dealing with the controversies of, say, 1760? Not at all. No such textbooks existed. Their political judgment was formed by the study of the classics of the ancient world and of the scholastic philosophy and of the history of the struggle for law by their ancestors in England during the seventeenth century. And so, though as children they probably did not hear in their schools the latest views on the latest news, when they grew up to be responsible men their minds had been stocked with the experience and wisdom which remained after the smoke and dust of ancient controversies had been cleared away. Thus they could see through the smoke and dust of the contemporary controversies and could judge them in perspective.

IF THEN WE wish seriously to examine the problem of education for citizenship, we shall have to examine it at a much deeper level than that on which Dr. Robey's and Dr. Rugg's opinions are clashing. We must ask ourselves the question whether in fact there is any way, except by studying the past, of educating men in the present for the future.

Our forefathers did not think there was any other way. When we examine the results of modern education, we might well ask ourselves whether they were not right, whether our contemporaneousness is not mis-education. Let us consider, for example, the study of the present war in high schools and even among undergraduates in the colleges. Let us ask ourselves whether there is a genuine education to be had by diverting their energy to the reading of news that cannot always be verified, that every competent reporter knows is inconclusive—to the discussion of interpretations and opinions by men and women who, if they are candid, will say they are groping in the dark and and through a thick fog.

MY NOTION is that the older curriculum was in principle right and that the way to prepare for contemporary affairs is to study the classics of human affairs. Then, for example, the best educational preparation for an understanding of this war would be a study of the wars of Napoleon and the wars of Marlborough and back of them, perhaps, of the Crusades, and first of all, I should think, as the proper foundation, the Persian and the Peloponesian and the Punic Wars.

The struggles between Hellas and Persia, between Athens and Sparta, between Rome and Carthage, are a better subject-matter for the textbooks in the schools than are the communiques, broadcasts, and comments of the present war. For the past is more intelligible than the present. Since the conclusions are known, it is more available for the study of cause and effect, of good and evil. The issues are clearer. And, above all, they do not engage the student's passions before his reason is trained to control them, before his mind has been formed by contemplating experience to discriminate among experiments.

Fair Enough

The Army In Mufti

ALTHOUGH some of the soldiers of the new Army and some of the young Navy flat-hats are setting new standards in bearing and dress which follow the influence of the "sloppy Joe" army of France, the high-ranking officers of the staff are in no position to pull any snoots at any of them. George Marshall, the chief of staff, a general who could go around with four stars on each shoulder, is so bashful that he doesn't wear his soldier suit regularly, and any officer who should dress up in the quaint costume of his trade in Washington, except for a fancy-pants party at the White House or a high-class scuffle at the home of some refined millionaire, would be accused of insufferable swank and might be sent back to the soldiers for making himself conspicuous in public.

In a way these officers, of whom it seems that there are some huge number in the capital and in New York, recall the stories of Adolf Hitler's tourist invasions of Norway and Rumania, in which swarms of Nazis masqueraded as salesmen, buyers and fugitive intellectuals, and suddenly emerged from their hotel rooms attired for the fray.

CAPPY WELLS, the press officer who made football publicity for West Point in the days when it was decided to let the public know that those young men in gray were cadets and not letter-carriers, has been brought on from Louisville, where for several years he excercised his rank of major over two enlisted men and a lady civilian clerk.

Boosted to lieutenant colonel now, the Cap still goes around in mufti, and, now that I think of it, I believe the only time I ever saw him with his stuff on in all these years was one day at Gen. Smith's garden party in June Week, when the general noticed a spot of powdered sugar on the tip of his nose and inquired genially, "Been in the flour barrel, Capt. Wells?"

How do you suppose that infantry soldier got powder on his nose?

Well, June Week is a festive time at West Point, and did you ever dip your bill into a tall frosted glass of refreshment containing mint leaves dusted with powdered sugar? That was how, as I can safely tell you, now that the statute of limitations sure must have run against a solemn violation of a warrior's oath truly and faithfully to preserve and defend the United States Constitution, including the foul amendment.

Philip B. Fleming, graduate manager of sports at the Academy then, is a brigadier now, but serving in wages and hours, so perhaps he may be excused for not putting on his gear and clanking as he walks. But the Col. Robert C. Richardson, who was commandant of cadets, is now a major general and director of the Army's bureau of public relations, and he wears a black suit and looks as if he were fixing to clear his throat and say, "Brethren, let us bow our heads in two minutes of pious meditation."

GEN. TOOEY SPOTTS of the Air Corps, recently back from London, goes around wearing some tweedy thing that he picked up over yonder, and the town is full of rank and importance, and anyone less than a major is practically an Okie. But they all go around pretending to be grocers, morticians and veteran clerks at the Department of Commerce, and the odd part of it is that, although they look pretty imposing in their soldier clothes, Army officers in mufti, as a rule, look as if they had just crossed the continent in a slow train and hadn't undressed for a week.

They say the main reason for this is that they don't want to give Congress the jumps strutting their rank around in Government buildings, and the second reason given is that they like to be able to drop in for a dram at the hotels without creating an impression that the whole United States Army has no occupation other than just that.

There is a little more truth to the second excuse than to the first, but the real reason, as this keen, trained observer has discerned, is that in mufti they can go baggy or half shaved and don't have to suck it up and pull in their as an example of fine military bearing to the laity and the enlisted personnel.

But that is life for you, ain't it? They fret and grind through school and eat their hearts out for slow, gradual gains in rank, and when they get up there they go around posing as suburban taxpayers and leaders of the P. T. A.

State Enriched $100 by 'Sinner'

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 28 (AP).—State Comptroller J. Millard Tawes opened a cheap, pencil-addressed envelope with the rest of his mail. Out dropped a $100 bill and this note, printed on a scrap of paper:

"Please put this $100 in the treasury. I made a mistake. Please forgive. God bless you. A follower of Christ."

There was no signature or clue to the sender, other than a Westminster postmark.

Tawes announced he had deposited the bill in the State treasury's "Conscience Fund."

1 of His 2 Hearts Fails, Man Dies

Medford, Oreg., Feb. 28 (AP).—John S. Frick, 73-year-old farmer who died Monday, had two hearts of normal size, Dr. A. E. Merkel, county physician, reported yesterday after an autopsy.

A ruptured left ventricle of the extra heart was ascribed as the cause of death. Dr. Merkel said one heart was in normal position, the other—the one that failed—was located just above the spleen and below the left lung.

Soviet Silence

By Harold J. Laski

Russian Reaction To Balkan Tangle

London.

AS I WRITE nothing has happened to proclaim with any precision the complete tangle of the Balkans. All that is, I think, clear is that Germany has decided, cost what may, to treat Bulgaria as Rumania has already been treated, and it is evident from that decision that Hitler does not fear any interference from the Soviet Union.

Speculation is widespread on the actual motives which prompt what is virtually Soviet abdication in the Balkans. At the moment, obviously, the historic role of Russia as protector of the Slav States is in complete suspense. The silence of the Soviet Union on a number of outstanding themes is significant. There has been no reply after four months, to the British note of last October. There has been no expression of view upon the aggressive role that Japan is at least threatening to assume in the Far East. There is little or nothing to indicate what Soviet opinion would be on a German drive which, if it were successful, would plant Nazism fairly squarely in a position where the threat to vital Russian interests is as obvious as it is outstanding.

LASKI

WHAT IS THE explanation of the Soviet silence? In this country three predominant explanations are offered. One school, mainly Tory Imperialists in complexion though by no means wholly so, argues that the Soviet Union is bound to the function of a mere observer by secret clauses in the Russo-German pact. On this view, she is reconciled to the idea of a German victory in belief that the deeper enemy is Britain, behind which she sees the immense resources of America. With them, she thinks, there is no ultimate reconciliation possible. And she views their defeat with equanimity because she thinks the loot Germany will take after a victory will for a long time satiate Nazi needs. Russia, meanwhile, remains at peace and builds up her own strength.

There are many difficulties in the way of accepting this view, of which I mention three only. There is the assumption that Stalin can count on the benevolence of a victorious Hitler; all the evidence points in the opposite direction. There is the assumption that Stalin really believes that a victorious Britain, spurred on by Wall Street, will as soon as it emerges from the present deadly struggle begin redirection of its energies to waging another first-class war. Stalin, I suggest, has been guilty of immense errors of judgment, but I know of nothing to suggest that he is capable of the gigantic miscalculation that acceptance of this view implies.

THERE IS THE assumption, thirdly, that in the light of his obvious knowledge of Hitler's habits Stalin could view with equanimity a German thrust which would bring the rich oil-bearing region of the Caucasus within striking distance of German arms. This would mean that Stalin was prepared to offset all his gains in the Baltics by risks on the Black Sea which would more than counterbalance them. This, I think, is fantastic nonsense.

The second school of thought, among which many Socialists may be found, believes Stalin is anxious for a long drawn out war of exhaustion. This would, in his judgment, mean the undermining of the Hitler regime and the British Empire from within; there would be revolutionary uprisings throughout Europe due to the agonies of the people, and he would, as leader of the Soviet Union, then emerge as the leader of the revolutionary forces in Europe.

The weakness of this view is great. It assumes that a long drawn out struggle is possible. It assumes that externally the Soviet Union is still a revolutionary force in Europe. It assumes that Stalin could afford to take risks at least as profound as those which naziism itself has taken in this war. It assumes, finally, that workers, Sovietophile minority apart, after the Russo-German Pact look in any full way to the Soviet Union for leadership. It is, I think, on the contrary true that to most of the workers' a Sovietophile minority apart, the German view of Russia is that of a power which has largely abandoned its interest in the well-being of workers outside its own frontiers. And this school forgets that without a speedy German victory Hitler's ability to withstand the combined resources of Britain and America will rapidly diminish; he will then be permanently on the defensive and a dictator in his position dare not hope to continue to play a permanently defensive role. Either Germany wins before this autumn or its defeat is certain. Stalin has no chance of getting his long drawn out war.

THE THIRD SCHOOL of thought takes a much simplier view of Stalin's motives and I think its simplicity is founded on fact. Stalin is afraid of Hitler. He has seen the immensity of his victories. He is not persauded that Hitler can be beaten. He knows of the blow Hitler could direct at the Ukraine were he to move in an anti-Nazi direction. He could count, no doubt, on waging a long defensive war. But he might well invite attack by Japan. He would have to desist from further aid to China and thereby add gravely to the powers of Japanese aggression.

He dare not anger Hitler; that is why he leaves Anglo-Soviet relations in midair. For Anglo-American good will is only important to him when he can be sure that a British victory is likely to result. He is fearful no doubt, of the German advance in the Balkans, but with the fate of Poland before him, he is not certain that in the spring of 1941 British help and even Anglo-Turkish help would be swift enough and extensive enough to prove decisive. He thinks German hostility is the greatest immediate risk to Soviet security and he has no real interest in the present conflict except maintenance of Soviet security.

STALIN'S attitude is intelligible, however much it reflects the cynicism of one who puts power politics before him as his end in its most cynical form. The responsibility for this outlook is only partly his own; no small part of it rests on the statesmen, European and American, since 1917, and still more to the main actors in the appeasement period. The reality of Stalin's fear of Hitler was well demonstrated this week when Litvinoff was jettisoned from the central committee of the Communist Party. That was an announcement to Berlin that the Soviet Union does not dare leave the path of strict neutrality. It was the signal to Hitler that he need not fear Soviet interference in the Balkan adventure.

The Gallup Poll

South Is 3 to 1 for Aid Bill Passage; Other Sections Less Favorably Inclined

By Dr. George Gallup,

Princeton, N. J., Feb. 28.—When H. R. 1776—the lease-lend bill—came to a vote in the House of Representatives a fortnight ago, observers noted one of the most striking sectional cleavages on any major legislation in months:

The Southern members voted almost solidly for passage of the bill; the Midwesterns strongly against it.

To what extent is the same sectional contrast to be found in rank-and-file opinion?

Latest sectional studies by the American Institute of Public Opinion indicate that although something of the same contrast can be found between Southern and Middle Western viewpoints on the bill, the differences are not nearly so pronounced as they have been upon the floor of Congress.

In the 13 Southern States, stretching from Virginia to Texas, for instance, nearly three voters in every four in the Institute survey say Congress should pass the bill. The remainder are divided among those definitely opposed to the bill, those who are undecided about it, and those with particular qualifications attached to their replies.

But despite a slight drop in the number favoring passage of the bill throughout the country, since the beginning of Congressional debate, backers of the bill are ahead in all sections of the country.

Voters were asked whether they had read or heard of the measure (more than 90 per cent had), and such persons were asked:

"Do you think Congress should pass this bill?"

	Yes	No	Qual.	Un-dec.
New England	52%	21%	15%	12%
Mid-Atlantic	54	18	13	15
East Central	50	24	11	15
West Central	51	22	11	16
South	73	9	6	12
West	57	19	11	13

Interviewing revealed that of the three largest cities in this country, Chicago is by far the most closely divided on the merits of the legislation.

In New York City those definitely in favor of the bill outnumber those definitely opposed by approximately 2 to 1, with an even larger majority for the bill in Philadelphia, third-largest city. Results of one interviewing in these cities shows:

DO YOU THINK CONGRESS SHOULD PASS THIS BILL?

	Yes	No	Qual.	Un-dec.
New York City	55%	28%	13%	4%
Chicago	37	38	9	16
Philadelphia	60	20	10	10

Leading qualifications attached by some voters were: "If it doesn't give too much power to one man," and "if it doesn't get us into war." All qualified replies were listed separately.

Americans Want Out

The 'Lost Column'

Out of possibly 2,500 Americans now in England at least half are desperately anxious to get back to the United States.

Many of these Americans describe themselves as constituting a "lost column."

Except for those engaged in United States Government service (diplomatic and consular staffs, military and naval observers, etc.) and those doing official work of various kinds in connection with the war or acting as newspaper correspondents, a large majority of the United States citizens now in England would like to return to America.

The inability of this "lost column" to get back home arises from several things.

Under our neutrality act not only are American ships forbidden to go to the British Isles, but also American citizens are forbidden to travel on any ships in belligerent waters.

It is therefore illegal for Americans now in England to take British ships back to America even though they may be willing to travel through the submarine infested waters at their own risk.

Only Route Open

The only transportation now legally available from the United States to any part of Europe consists of the American Export Line ships going to Lisbon, Portugal, and the Pan-American clipper planes that fly from New York to Lisbon.

The only route open from Portugal to England is the air service operated theoretically by the KLM (Holland) airline, which is, of course, actually conducted by the British government.

The limited passenger capacity of this air service allows only a tiny trickle of incoming and outgoing travel in comparison with the hundreds of people who would like to use it.

It is extremely difficult for an ordinary civilian to secure a seat on an airplane from England to Lisbon. Far more places are required for people on important or official business than the capacity of the planes will accommodate.

Some Americans Bitter

Some of the Americans still residing in the United Kingdom are bitter, probably unjustifiably, toward the United States Government for apparently not sympathizing more deeply with their plight and for not taking more aggressive action toward trying to help them get home.

It is true, of course, that Washington officially warned Americans in England to return to the United States before the war started, and subsequently arranged for various American ships to go to Ireland to pick up American there and bring them back to the United States.

Many of the Americans still in England, however, say that because they were businessmen entrusted with important responsibilities they were not able to leave Britain earlier, when there was still an opportunity for them to go.

They say that now that the war has developed into its present phase their business functions have contracted to a point where they can leave, and they are anxious to get home.

Nazi Refuse Guaranty

The American diplomatic officials say that the United States recently asked the German government to guarantee immunity against submarine or dive bombing attacks to another American refugee ship that might be sent to Britain or Ireland, but that Germany declined to give the requested assurances.

Some of the Americans still in the United Kingdom make the argument that one tangible way to provide economic help to Britain would be to relieve her of the necessity of feeding the 1,500 or so nonproductive Americans who want to get home.

They suggest several possible solutions.

One is for President Roosevelt by executive action or for Congress by joint resolution to authorize those Americans now in the United Kingdom to travel from Britain or Ireland back to the United States, at their own risk, on either British ships or on ships sailing under a neutral flag, even though there would be no guarantee against German attacks on the ships upon which they were traveling.

New Airline Suggested

Another suggestion, although it contains obvious dangers, is that the United States Government might take steps to inaugurate airplane service from England to Lisbon so that Americans could reach Portugal and take American Export Line ships to New York.

Another suggestion is that the United States Government might publicly and officially announce to Germany that it was sending an American ship to Ireland to repatriate the Americans now in the United Kingdom, that the ship would be convoyed by war vessels of the American Navy and that any attack by German submarines or dive-bombers would be met by an immediate American counter-attack.

Persons advocating this plan argue that such a public advance announcement would be sufficient to cause Hitler to instruct his U-boats and dive-bombers not to molest the American refugee ship and consequently it would be overwhelmingly unlikely that any incident might develop that would precipitate us into war with Germany.

Although the majority of the Americans now in the United Kingdom would be able to pay the cost of their transportation passage, undoubtedly some could not raise the money.

Even This Path May Be Barred

Whatever method of repatriating these Americans may finally be decided upon probably the transportation expenses of a considerable number will have to be paid in whole or in part by the Government.

Serious as is the present problem of transporting mail and important passengers from America to England via Lisbon, Portugal, it is by no means certain that even the present form of service can be continued much longer.

If Hitler this spring invades and occupies Spain, many observers anticipate that he will subsequently occupy Portugal and thus make Portugal a belligerent nation.

If that development should occur, undoubtedly, the Pan-American clipper service and the American Export Line steamship service from New York to Lisbon would have to be abandoned.

If Ireland should not be invaded by Hitler and should continue to maintain its present neutrality, one possible partial solution might be for the United States Government to revise its present regulations and allow Pan-American clipper planes to fly from New York via Botwood, Newfoundland, to Ireland.

What Britain Needs

By Mark Sullivan

Possibility Of Our Navy As A Convoy

WHAT BRITAIN needs from the United States has been stated in specific terms by persons having practically authoritative information. It has been put in the concrete terms of planes, destroyers, naval vessels and other commodities. All these needs come down to mainly two categories.

SULLIVAN

Britain needs that which takes skilled labor to produce. The more intricate the object, the greater the amount of skilled labor involved, the greater is Britain's need—an outstanding example is airplanes. In Britain today, skilled labor is precious as jewels. Some of her skilled labor is in the army, and more may need to bear arms in case of attempted invasion by Hitler. All the skilled labor that England has available is busy upon every variety of armament.

In addition to scarcity of labor, there is a second handicap. Practically every factory in England is subject to air raids. The damage done by air raids has been surprisingly small—in the most intensively raided city, Coventry, the injury done to industrial plants was slight, compared to the destruction of residences and the loss of life. But air raids do cause some diminution of factory capacity, some interruption of output.

One kind of industrial activity, the building and repair of ships, is under a special handicap. A ship is a large object, an easily seen target. When being built or repaired it must remain for a prolonged period in a fixed spot—a spot on the seacoast, and therefore especially subject to attack from the air, from the sea and even by German guns that can fire across the Channel. Along much of the coast of England, the part closest to Nazi-occupied France, Belgium and Holland, shipyards have either been damaged, or are so subject to attack as to make building or repairing ships difficult. This results in crowding of work in the yards on the relatively safer parts of the coast.

It is because of this that Britain would be aided if she could get the privilege of having her damaged ships, both naval and mercantile, repaired in American yards, and new ones built here. Some persons estimate that this one form of American help, if of sufficient quantity, would overcome the most serious of Britain's handicaps. But airplanes are an almost equally serious need. In any event, man power in American shipyards and factories is at this time an infinitely greater help to Britain than man power on the battlefield would be. The fact is, at this time there is no battlefield in the ordinary sense, and hence no need for armed men from America.

Britain needs that which—as it has been expressed—will keep her esophagus open, protect the now rather narrow sea lane through which her supplies must come. While no one of the several sea approaches to Britain is completely closed, all have been made difficult. The most open lane remaining is the one north of Ireland. That this and all the lanes be kept as open as possible is Britain's largest comprehensive need. The need is not so much for food as for other supplies. Of food, Britain has on hand, or through her own means of production, a supply as large as to leave no present need for concern. But of military supplies, Britain can make use of all she can get.

Keeping supplies flowing means ships—mercantile ships to carry the supplies, naval vessels to protect the mercantile ones.

The sinking of British mercantile ships by the Nazis is serious enough. But the figured about sinkings do not tell the whole story. In many ways, the ships that remain safe and afloat are rendered less effective by wartime conditions. In normal peacetime, England can get butter and other food by a short sea trip from Holland or Denmark. Today such supplies can be got only by trans-Atlantic trips. Moreover, war cuts down the speed of ships—they just take roundabout paths to avoid submarines. They must travel in convoys, and the speed of a whole convoy is the speed of the slowest ship. Ships are slowed down by prolonged use without opportunity for repairs.

It has been estimated that Britain ought to have, within a reasonably short period, some 3,000,000 tons of mercantile shipping from the United States. This would mean about 400 ships of an average size of 7,000 to 8,000 tons.

Keeping Britain's sea lane open means keeping Nazi submarines off. To this end Britain would be helped by anything she could get from America in the form of naval vessels. It might be by naval vessels turned over to her for operation by her own crews, as was done in the case of the 50 destroyers. Even more useful would be the direct use of American naval vessels with their own American crews to protect the sea lane to England. To this use of American naval vessels for convoy, much excited objection has been expressed in the Congressional debate on the lease-lend bill. Admittedly, use of our Navy in this way would be a long step toward war. Yet our own American thought may pass through the same kind of change it has already passed through with respect to neutrality. Today American opinion is willing to do very much more than when we adopted the rigid neutrality law in November, 1939. After the lease-lend bill is passed, as it is practically certain to be in some form, or even if the present status were to continue, with Britain buying immense quantities of supplies from America—in either event we are likely to be more tolerant of the use of our Navy to see that the supplies we make for Britain are safely delivered.

The Man Who Came to Dinner Likes Breakfast Better

By Robert DeVore
Post Staff Writer

A fat man with horn-rimmed spectacles, mustache and gray mane has established a base at the White House from which to spread the gospel that life, if not beautiful, is most certainly a lot of fun.

He operates also at the National Theater. His name is Alexander Woollcott, living embodiment of the proposition that the best way to get along is to be yourself, even if an actor.

Like the President of the United States, whose hospitality he has accepted presumably for a two-week siege, Mr. Woollcott is not to be quoted. It is said he considers the interview an outmoded journalistic technique. He learned about techniques in some two decades as newspaper reporter and drama critic.

Alexander Woollcott had an argument about journalism at the theater yesterday with Irving Schlossenberg, a photographer for The Post. The first round was fought in his dressing room two minutes before curtain time. The second round was decided in the wings just before the man went to dinner in a wheel chair. Mr. Schlossenberg won both rounds.

Round one begins with Mr. W. trying to convince Mr. S. that the picture he really wants is one that hangs in his dressing room showing Mr. W. in the act of tossing fish to a couple of porpoises full length out of water.

"It's the best picture I ever had taken," Mr. W. advises.

"But it doesn't show your face," Mr. S. protests in a way that seems to suggest why Mr. W. prefers the photograph.

"Young man, I am a journalist and a good one. If you were a good journalist you'd know that's a good picture."

"But I don't want to be a journalist, not even a good one."

End of round one.

In the wings Mr. S. is attempting to pose Mr. W. and Janet Fox, his stage nurse, adjusting a wheel-chair blanket. Mr. S. wants Miss Fox with her side to the camera. Mr. W. insists that it would be best from the back.

"That might be a good picture for your collection, Mr. Woollcott, but I work for a family newspaper."

End of round two.

The Man at the White House has begun to compete for the affections of the company of the "Man Who Went to Dinner." There is good reason to believe that until about 72 hours ago Alexander Woollcott held a monopoly on the affections of the people who are playing with him on F Street this week and next.

ALEXANDER WOOLLCOTT

But the monopoly has been broken by the charm of Franklin Roosevelt and his wife, Eleanor. It all happened when Mr. W. and his company went to the White House for supper the other night and listened to Mr. Roosevelt, prompted by Mrs. Roosevelt, tell the story of the time he had to order diapers for one of his grandchildren.

It would be all right with Mr. Woollcott if all the world could be charmed by the Roosevelts. He was positively lyrical about his hosts yesterday. He might have said of Mrs. Roosevelt, but, of course, he didn't:

"And we think we are on the move. She plays a one-night stand every night."

The lines belong to Janet Fox.

As everyone knows, "The Man Who Came to Dinner" is a vehicle for Woollcott's personality. But what everyone doesn't know is that Woollcott believes several other people might have played Woollcott better than Woollcott. John Barrymore, for one.

READY FOR DINNER—This is the picture The Post's photographer insisted on making of Woollcott with Janet Fox, who plays his nurse. In the stage show Mr. W. goes to dinner in this make-up in a wheelchair

But he wouldn't for a moment surrender the part to Barrymore, or anyone else. He's found that acting with a road company is a profession most admirably adapted to his social program. It gets him around the country to see his well-scattered and innumerable friends.

The Man Who Came to Dinner doesn't like dinner. Breakfast is the meal for him. That's when he sees most of his friends—from 9 a. m. to 1 p. m. That's where he saw Joseph Alsop, The Post columnist, and Edward Weeks, the editor, and Fala, the President's Scottie pup, a most charming animal whose name, he has it on the authority of Mr. Roosevelt, is spelled with one "l," despite what the newspapers say.

This week Alexander Woollcott has picked up threads of old friendships with Archibald MacLeish, the Librarian of Congress; the Dean Achesons, Francis Biddle, the Solicitor General; Ruth Gordon, who was Mary Todd in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois;" Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter and Walter Lippmann, Post columnist.

Dr. William M. Mann, director of the Zoo, visited Woollcott in his dressing room. Their friendship is rooted in a mutual preference for quadrupeds as against bipeds.

Victor Rainiez, the Filipino who helps Woollcott into his makeup, has been employed by three widely known personalities. The first was Gene Markey, the writer, lately divorced from Hedy Lamarr, the actress. The second was Walter Wanger, the producer, lately married to Joan Bennett, an earlier wife of Markey. The third was Woollcott.

As an old newspaperman, Alexander Woollcott undoubtedly knows the old reporter's superstition about everything coming in threes.

Our Weather Picture—Dear Boss: Here it is. Picture of a squirrel sitting on a limb, undecided whether to sit on the limb and be partially protected from the snow, or to go down to look for nuts he had hidden in better days and be unprotected from the snow. After waiting for ten minutes for the squirrel to move I left, assuming that the squirrel was frozen.—L. S.

Fledgling C. A. A. Struggles Under Weight of Fifth Fatal Crash

CRASHED A MILE FROM SAFETY—This T. W. A. sky-sleeper crashed a mile from the St. Louis, Mo., municipal airport in the dawn of January 23, of this year. Ten passengers, the co-pilot and stewardess were injured

By George Bookman
Post Staff Writer.

Storm clouds and poor visibility are in the future for the Civil Aeronautics Authority as a result of the crash early Thursday in the Georgia pine country that converted a sleek airliner into a crumpled coffin for seven passengers.

The history of the agency that regulates civilian flying has been punctuated, and often greatly influenced, by sudden death.

A fatal crash taking the life of Senator Bronson Cutting led to creation of the CAA, which began operating as an independent agency August 22, 1938, removing air traffic control from the Commerce Department.

In its first seven months there were three fatal crashes, taking a total of 17 lives, but on March 26, 1939, began a 17-month, world-record period that saw not a single fatal airline accident.

This period of safe flying and popularity for the CAA ended gruesomely August 31, 1940, in a field near Lovettsville, Va., when 25 airline passengers, including Senator Lundeen, of Minnesota, lost their lives.

Grief for CAA—and indirectly for the White House—arose from the fact that just eight weeks earlier a Presidential order putting supervision of civil aeronautics back in the Commerce Department had become effective.

Since Lovettsville the death role has mounted. The crash near Atlanta this week was the fifth fatal airline accident since CAA was reorganized, bringing the total of deaths since reorganization to 54.

Critics of President Roosevelt's reorganization order of last spring, led by Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, father of the original CAA law, are now trying to establish a connection between the five fatal crashes and the changed setup in Washington for regulating civil air traffic.

What changes have actually been made by the President's reorganization order?

Three separate and independent agencies, as independent as the Interstate Commerce Commission, controlled civil flying from 1938 until last spring.

The three, all responsible to the President, but not to each other, were:

1. An Air Safety Board of three members, charged with investigation of all accidents, determination of their causes and recommendation of remedies.

2. A Civil Aeronautics Authority, charged with enacting the Air Safety Board's recommendations into regulations and enforcing them.

3. A Civil Aeronautics Administration, responsible for general administration of the civil air laws, licensing of pilots, certification of new lines and inspection of airways.

Thus the Air Safety Board could determine the cause of an accident and recommend measures to prevent recurrence of a similar accident, but had no power to see that its ideas were carried out and no power to penalize violators of safety regulations.

The job of policing and enforcing the boards' ideas and translating them into air law was left to the Civil Aeronautics Authority. The task of deciding who shall be permitted to fly rested with the third agency, the Civil Aeronautics Administration.

Vote Was Close

"To clarify" this situation, President Roosevelt last April proposed his Reorganization Plans III and IV, basis for the new civil air setup within the Commerce Department.

These plans carried in the Congress by only a narrow margin. The House turned down Plan IV by a 232-153 vote in which many Democrats sided with a solid Republican minority against the reorganization. President Roosevelt's plan was saved in the Senate by a 48-34 favorable vote and the reorganization went into effect because a majority "no" vote of both houses of Congress is required to reject a reorganization plan.

Critics pointed out that a shift of seven votes in the Senate would have defeated the reorganization plan.

How New System Works

This new setup works out as follows:

The reorganization moved the entire three-agency mechanism for regulating civil aviation into the Commerce Department.

Inside that framework, the Civil Aeronautics Authority, now a mere letterhead, is divided into two parts:

A Civil Aeronautics Board of five members, truly the law-making arm, which has as a subdivision a safety bureau to take the place of the old Air Safety Board, which was abolished.

A Civil Aeronautics Administration, directed by an Administrator, which carries out the decisions and policies laid down by the CAB.

Officials explain that the board's connection with the Commerce Department is purely nominal. The Commerce Department performs house-keeping functions, such as mimeographing, for the board, but Secretary Jones has no authority over personnel, no power over the budget and no voice in the policies of the CAB.

Both Judge and Jury

Whereas before reorganization one agency investigated accidents and another acted on the results of the investigation, that is now done by one unit.

From one point of view, the CAB has full power to investigate plane crashes, find out why they happened, draw up recommendations and then enforce them by revoking licenses and certificates.

Stated somewhat differently, however, the CAB is in a position of passing judgment on its own handiwork, of acting both as judge and jury and prosecuting attorney.

The board reports directly to Congress and, although its reports are technically supposed to be shown to the Secretary of Commerce, he cannot change them. The board is appointed by the President.

The Civil Aeronautics Administration is the creature of the Department of Commerce and makes no bones about it. Assistant Secretary of Commerce Robert H. Hinckley, who used to be chairman of the old CAA and was elevated to the "little cabinet" in the midst of the fight last year over the President's reorganization plan, runs the Administration.

The board and the Administration operate separately and their officials say that CAA does not even see a CAB decision until it is released to the press.

Just Spinach

The history of how President Roosevelt's reorganization of civil air regulation came about sheds light on the import of the changes.

The President proposed his plan April 11, saying it would eliminate the "confusion of responsibilities" in the old triple setup.

Immediately charges were made by Senator McCarran and others that it would imperil air safety. To these charges the President replied: spinach.

A formidable group of aviation people opposed the change. These included the Air Line Pilots Association, whose members fly the Nation's passenger planes; the Air Line Mechanics Association, and the Air Transport Association of America, representing the airlines themselves.

Angered when the pilots sent a delegation to Washington labeled as a "lobby to save lives," the President said the criticism of his plan was based on a "flood of misinformation," caused by ignorance, gullibility or politics.

Called a "Maneuver"

At the height of the controversy, Hinckley, then the CAA chairman, came out for the White House plan. His indorsement was termed a "maneuver" by opponents of the plan.

A day later Harold Smith, Budget Director, who had made a study of the old air regulating setup for the President, issued a statement containing an assurance that the new Air Safety Board would be "completely independent and in no way subject to control by the Department of Commerce or the Secretary thereof."

It then developed that there had been bitter quarrels within the old Air Safety Board, that two of its members had consistently combined in the voting against the third until he was forced out of the chairmanship and finally resigned. It was also brought out that the Air Safety Board members themselves, tired of the dissension, had urged the President to take "affirmative action" to end this state of affairs.

Anxiety in Congress

The anxiety in Congress lest the new reorganized agency be dominated by the Commerce Department traced back to a Senate investigation of the regime of the old Bureau of Air Commerce in the Commerce Department. This investigation charged "personal, promotional and political activities" in air regulation in the Commerce Department. Under Commerce supervision of the airways there were 120 airline crashes, killing 148 pilots, 279 passengers and 48 stewardesses.

The CAB has reported on only two of the five crashes since the reorganization.

The Lovettsville disaster was laid to disabling of the pilots with a lightning flash as the "probable cause."

In the report on the crash near Salt Lake City, Utah, December 4, the CAB by implication blamed itself and the CAA. The accident was laid to "malfunctioning" of the Salt Lake City radio beam and the report said the CAA had not made its employes who monitor radio beams realize sufficiently the importance of their work. By implication, the CAB blamed itself for not having enacted stringent enough rules to cope with such cases.

'High Sierra' Is the High In Gangster Melodramas

Humphrey Bogart and Ida Lupino Starred In New Feature at Earle That Defies Tradition; Cass Daley Tops on the Stage

"HIGH SIERRA." Warner Brothers picturization of a novel by W. R. Burnett, adapted to the screen by the author and John Huston, costarring Humphrey Bogart and Ida Lupino, with Alan Curtis, Arthur Kennedy, Joan Leslie, Henry Hull, Henry Travers, Jerome Cowan, Minna Gombell, Barton MacLane, Elisabeth Risdon, Donald MacBride, Paul Harvey, Willie Best, Spencer Charters, George Meeker, John Eldredge and the canine Zero in the important role of Pard. Directed by Raoul Walsh. At the Earle.

BELL

INSTEAD OF BEING the "gangster picture to end all gangster pictures" this should have been the one to begin them. Strangely enough, "High Sierra" is not in the mold of the usual epic of hoodlumism. It subordinates slaughter to psychology and tommy-guns to sentiment. It makes a not too complex human being of one of Dillinger's descendants and at times is as warming in its gentleness as at other times it is violent in its viciousness.

Skillfully adapted by the author and John Huston from the W. R. Burnett novel of the same name, "High Sierra" depends less upon exercises of physical violence for its tenseness and suspense than upon the minute examination of the characters of the social outlaws comprising the ominous group of its principal figures. By all precedent, this sort of thing should blaze its way to melodramatic madness by gunfire. There is some gunfire in it, of course, but it is of secondary importance. The main contention of the celluloid seems to be that crooks are people and that while crime may not pay, it can, in some circumstances, be made the instrument of wide human understanding and kindness. It is a welcome relief from the usual formula.

The action is initiated by the pardon of a desperate criminal from a penitentiary. He is assigned from the Middle West to a nasty job in California. This takes the form of the blasting of an opulent hotel resort where a vast amount of swag promises rich rewards to the big-time petermen who are able to get away with it. But a girl and a dog enter the life of the chief protagonist of the picture's duplex developments and, as is customary in such cases, the predatory powers find themselves powerless when the thing is fought out to its final tragedy in the rocky fastnesses of Mount Whitney, the highest peak in the Sierras.

There are some lagging moments along the way, and occasionally one wonders at the introduction of extraneous scenes and bits of action that seem to impede rather than further the story, but in the end the conviction is that here is a film that goes a little deeper into the mental workings of what used to be termed "the powers that prey" than most of its predecessors.

There is no one known to this department more fully and competently equipped to portray the role of the paroled killer than Humphrey Bogart, who appears in the character of Roy Earle. Save for a few contradictory passages in the dialogue, Mr. Earle might be Mr. Dillinger. Anyhow, he wears the same stripes. We have heard surreptitiously, from some who knew him, that John Dillinger, at heart, was not so bad; merely a victim of circumstances, whose outlook upon life was warped by youthful persecutions that twisted his perspective and made him an instinctive enemy of society. Mr. Bogart by his performance in "High Sierra" makes that believable. The girl in the case—there are two of them, as a matter of fact—is Ida Lupino, one of the most vibrant young actresses on the screen. The secondary feminine role is played by Joan Leslie, the Warner Brothers' "find," who seems to justify all of the extravagant things that have been etalmed for her and her future. Others of importance in the cast include Henry Travers, Henry Hull, Alan Curtis, Arthur Kennedy and practically all of the rest listed in the small-type paragraph preceding these vagrant comments.

With his habitual aptitude for such things, Harry Anger has tossed together a happy and high-pressure revue for the Earle's stage this week. Cass Daley, recently costarred at the National with the late lamented Joe Penner, in "Yokel Boy," is the chief implement of the pastiming's irresistible impact. Miss Daley, as every informed theatergoer must know by now, is one of the most dynamic singing comediennes the contemporary theater is able to muster. Her songs yesterday scored what should have been a show-stopping hit. But the show was not permitted to stop. Miss Daley's applause merely ran through most of the Roxyettes' following number and virtually wrecked it. Others whose talents Mr. Anger has enlisted for the current frolic are Adriana & Charly, who make the trampoline a source of both amazement and amusement, and Harris, Claire and Shannon, the lone male and two feminine dancers, who prove so conclusively that three do not necessarily make a crowd.

Eileen Ritter's introductory carols—if "Boogie-Woogie Bugle Boy" is a carol—Jo Lombardi's spirited orchestrals and the newsreel complete an entertainment that places at least one gangster on a knee-high pedestal, from which he is dislodged by bullets that fulfill the function of the Hays office in making it plain that killers must eventually be killed in the interest of public morals.

After All, Nothing Really Could Be That Funny!

BURGESS MEREDITH, MERLE OBERON, MELVYN DOUGLAS give only the impression that Ernst Lubitsch's forthcoming production of "That Uncertain Feeling" must be as hilariously amusing as they seem to think it is. One day Heifetz rode in a taxi with his brother-in-law, Playwright Sam Behrman . . . After a few minutes of silence, Behrman politely asked: "Have you seen any plays lately?" . . . Heifetz turned and softly said: "Wouldn't you like to know?"

MAURICE FINKELSTEIN, professor at St. John's University, school of law, booked passage on a plane from Kansas City to New York. He asked the stewardess for some sleeping pills, told her not to wake him until the plane arrived in New York, and then he crept into his upper berth . . . When the stewardess awoke him, the drowsy Finkelstein asked: "Are we in New York already?" . . . "No," she whispered, "we're in Chicago . . . "Then why'd you wake me?" he asked . . . "Sh . . . but I thought you wanted to know this," the stewardess informed. "In the berth below you—is Hedy Lamarr."

Metropolitan

Rosalind Russell and Melvyn Douglas, newlyweds with sharply contrasting ideas on marriage, have set up housekeeping for a second downtown week of "This Thing Called Love." And a richly deserved second week it is, too, for Miss Russell and Douglas, teamed for the first time, have a comedy that is made to order for them and patrons of the Metropolitan.

Plot of the piece is about an efficiency expert who thinks marriage is too abrupt, that a trial period of three months should be observed by all young couples, during which time the newlyweds should live together platonically, as brother and sister. Rosalind Russell plays the part of the efficiency expert to the hilt, calling on all her artistry as a wise-cracking, bossy, sophisticated and thoroughly charming comedienne. As the willing, though somewhat bewildered husband, Melvyn Douglas also is in a tailor-made part.

Comedy Perfectly Dovetailed

The Douglas and Russell brands of comedy dovetail perfectly; they make a hilarious team. In supporting roles are Allyn Joslyn, Binnie Barnes, Gloria Holden and Gloria Dixon, who are all well cast, but subordinate to the stars and story.

The balance of the picture is taken up with Rosalind trying to prove her theory, and Melvin trying to break down her resistance through trickery, champagne and animal magnetism. How he finally succeeds is as deft a bit of comedy as the screen has produced in some time. The picture as a whole is amusing, very much on the risque side, definitely adult entertainment. Its chief fault seems to be the length. "This Thing Called Love" could profit from a little judicious clipping.

Short subjects at the Met this week are a sportsreel, "Fish Can Fight," and the latest Paramount and Universal newsreels.

Roscoe Karns' boy, Todd, who burst upon surprised Hollywood in "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary" as a full fledged actor, is launched in a big way on his movie career. Some years ago, when he was a lad of fourteen, he told Leo McCarey he wanted to be a movie actor. "Go to school and study dramatic art and then come and see me," McCarey told him. Well, the upshot of the matter is that Todd presented himself to McCarey the other day and he promptly signed young Karns to a personal long-term contract.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Barbara Allen (Vera Vague) continues to occupy most of Gene Towne's time. He was at the Hollywood Tropics the other eve with her; June Duprez, surprisingly enough, was with Reginald Gardiner, at Ciro's, while her erstwhile boy friend, Randy Scott, was with Liz Whitney; they were among those who applauded Rosario and Antonio; Betty Grable, who looked mighty cute in a blue sports dress (she was one of the few not in evening clothes) was with George Raft. They all but cheered the two youngsters; Maria Montez was in a party with Marc Connolly; Eddie Goulding came in with Countess di Frasso and a crowd; Ria Gable, by the way, arrives tomorrow to be Dorothy's houseguest; Dorothy Lamour, wearing the diamond ring Greg Bautzer gave her, Pat Morison with Wyn Rocomora and many others really forewent dancing long enough to applaud the two youngsters and they are just babies.

The most interesting evening I have spent in Hollywood in many a day was at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Charles Phillips. They entertained in honor of Dr. Oswald S. Lowsley, famous surgeon, whose work has been recognized by governments all over the world. Dr. Verne Mason was my dinner partner and I have seldom had so intellectual a conversation. Movies were never mentioned once and I was glad that I had married a doctor so I could understand partly, at least, some of the medical talk.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

Hollywood, Feb. 28.

When we talk about stars' careers only lasting five years, and some of them do, we reckon without such veterans as Alice Faye and Jane Withers. Alice has done 26 pictures in seven years, and has just signed another long-term contract. The other day she took out a trust fund of $10,000 for her standin, Helen Smith, who has worked with her through all those pictures, even went along on her elopement. When Helen was married, Alice gave her the wedding.

For years, travelogs proved that places were more interesting than people. Maybe that's why so many of our biographies have failed to hold up as motion pictures, but places go on forever. Take the success of "In Old Chicago," "San Francisco," "Virginia City," "Dodge City," "Santa Fe Trail," "Arizona." Another one is being done on Texas, this is the second time they've done Miami. O course, the faces in the places don't hurt the pictures any.

Director George Stevens wrote such a nice story about Martha Cheavens (the girl who wrote "Penny Serenade") for her college paper, and it was reprinted in many others. 'Mr. and Mrs. Smith,' at Keith's, Show How Not to Be Happily Married

"MR. AND MRS. SMITH." RKO-Radio picturization of a screen play by Norman Krasna, costarring Carole Lombard and Robert Montgomery, with Gene Raymond, Jack Carson, Philip Merivale, Lucile Watson, William Tracy, Charles Halton, Esther Dale, Emma Dunn, Betty Compson, Patricia Farr, William Edmunds and Adele Pearce. Directed by Alfred Hitchcock. At RKO-Keith's Theater.

It's stormy weather when Mr. Smith and his gal, Mrs. Smith, ain't together. But it's no picture of serenity when they make up.

The uncanny comedy sense of Director Alfred Hitchcock, one of Hollywood's best "buy British" acquisitions, tumbles "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" into all sorts of unpredictable scrapes. And Mr. and Mrs. Smith, as played by Carole Lombard and Robert Montgomery, are no commonplace couple. They're so full of amazing charm and downright orneryness that the Smith menage is a perpetual combination of battle-ground and love-nest.

The Hitchcock "touch" pops out like a jack-in-the-box in the opening scene. There are Mr. and Mrs. Smith in their bedroom. Mrs. Smith is in bed. Unshaven, Mr. Smith sits on the floor in his pajamas playing cards amid dozens of trays of half-eaten meals. Both are completely silent. You don't know whether Mrs. Smith is sick and her devoted husband won't stir from her side; whether they've both been on a binge; whether they've been kidnapped, or what. But no. It develops that Mr. and Mrs. Smith are just following out one of their elementary rules to preserve a happy married life—that neither of them shall leave the bedroom after a quarrel until they've made up. They've been deadlocked for three days.

This little tiff is made up in the first reel. Mrs. Smith shaves Mr. Smith (yes, she does!) and they breakfast happily with only one minor explosion caused by truthful Mr. Smith admitting that he wouldn't marry Mrs. Smith if he had it to do all over again.

Then arrives the debacle. Mr. Smith receives information that he isn't really legally married to Mrs. Smith. Through accident Mrs. Smith also hears the dread news, unbeknownst to her husband. She isn't worried a bit, preens herself happily, thinking her husband will come right home and marry her again that evening.

But that so-and-so of a Mr. Smith does no such thing. He grins fiendishly takes her out to dinner, buys champagne, says never a word about making her an honest woman, never breathes a hint that he knows about their true legal status. Mrs. Smith's endurance comes to an end when her husband dons his pajamas, seems to think he's in for the evening. Screaming righteous invective at her husband who is no husband, she throws him and his pajamas out of their home. Out of pure sweetness, she also flings an extra suit and pair of shoes after him.

That's just the beginning of Mr. and Mrs. Smith's fabulous attempts to live the good life. Mrs. Smith promptly gets engaged to handsome Gene Raymond (who's gone brunette) and whom Mr. Smith calls a "pile of Southern fried chicken." Mr. Smith gets entangled with a frightful blind date named Gertie, who gnaws drumsticks in public. Mr. Smith tries to get into his own house. He gets his foot in the door but it does him no good, because there's a new chain across it, especially designed to keep out burglars and make-believe husbands. But the masterful Mr. Smith is not to be balked in his reconciliation. He plays private detective, gets his wife fired from her job in the interval when she decides to be a "career woman." You'll love his technic of smacking Mrs. Smith down in a chair when she's just put on her skiis. She can't get up and she can't get down. All she can do is to lie half on her back with her feet in the air—and talk.

If you need a couple of hours of undiluted laughs—and who doesn't?—you'd better drop into Keith's and meet "Mr. and Mrs. Smith."

Defense preparations and angles constitute nine-tenths of the added features. Defense completely dominates a new government short about power development, a new March of Time that isn't quite so expert as some of its predecessors, and most of the newsreel. Defense is splendid, but if we must have so much of it in one movie show, why not put Donald Duck in uniform?

MARY HARRIS.

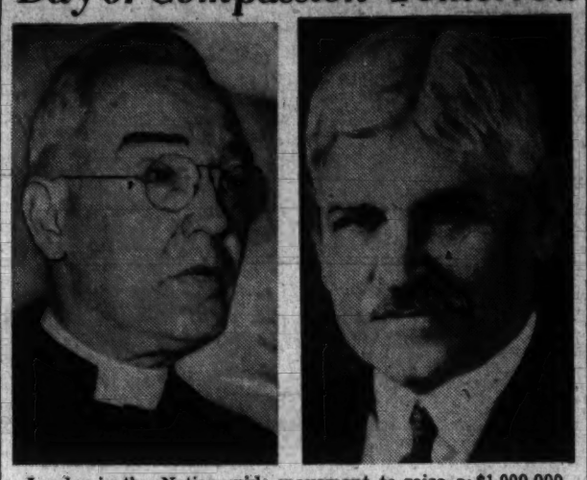
D. C. Methodists to Observe 'Day of Compassion' Tomorrow



Leader in the Nation-wide movement to raise a $1,000,000 Methodist emergency fund for war relief and camp service is Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, retired, of Washington (right, above). He is chairman of the national commission in charge of the collection being taken tomorrow in Methodist churches. Bishop Adna Wright Leonard (left, above), resident bsihop here, is supervising the Washington churches' effort to contribute $50,000 to the fund

Methodist churches in Washington, in unison with those throughout the Nation, tomorrow will observe a "Day of Compassion" with the collection of special offerings toward the goal of a $1,000,000 emergency fund for war relief and camp service.

The amount sought from churches in the Washington area is $50,000, it was announced by the national commission, which is headed by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, retired, of Washington.

One-fourth of the funds raised in the Nation-wide campaign will be used in and near U. S. Army camps and Naval bases for religious and welfare work among trainees.

Another one-fourth, an expected $250,000, will be earmarked for aid to British Methodism, where more than 600 churches of the Methodist connection have been seriously damaged or demolished by aerial bombardment, it is said.

The remaining one-half of the total fund will be used for relief of war-stricken people in China and Europe. Bishop Herbert Welch, of New York, chairman of the Methodist Committee for Overseas Relief, has given assurance that the fund will be so distributed that there will be no danger of money or supplies falling into the hands of aggressor nations.

O perfect Love, all human thought transcending,
Lowly we kneel in prayer before Thy throne,
That theirs may be the love that knows no ending,

Reducing Diet May Improve Disposition

By Ida Jean Kain

IF YOU have a good disposition to start with, you won't lose it on a balanced slimming diet. And if your disposition is nothing to brag about, it's just possible a diet may improve it. A scientific reducing diet is high in iron and vitamins, and, as a matter of fact, on a planned low calorie menu you are apt to be better fed than on your everyday bill of fare.

But your disposition is only one test of a diet. How do you feel? Are you tired? You shouldn't lose your pep. If you feel dragged out, there is something missing from the menu besides calories. Perhaps you are not including enough lean meat, eggs, skim milk or cheese in the menu. Protein is the backbone of a reducing diet.

If you catch a cold when you attempt to reduce, chances are you are not getting sufficient vitamin A. A reducing diet must be low in fat to keep the calories low, so butter, cream and whole milk are used sparingly. This cuts down on the vitamin A but the reducer can take a Haliver Oil capsule which supplies 6,000 to 10,000 units vitamin A without adding calories. If you do not wish to supplement the menu with a capsule, use daily, one egg, liberal serving of green leafy and yellow vegetable, three pats butter, each a fourth of an inch thick, plus one ounce of cheese or two glasses of whole milk. The concentrates are not a better source of vitamins than foods but they add vitamins without calories and allow more opportunity to vary the menus.

The vitamins most apt to be lacking in the reducer's diet are A and B1, so to be on the safe side, I suggest one concentrate supplying vitamins A, B, C and D. One capsule will supply all these vitamins in adequate amounts.

Of course, the nicest thing about dieting is getting slim. The final test is the weight loss. On a menu averaging 1,000 to 1,200 calories per day, you should lose between one and two pounds a week. If you are not averaging a half pound less per week, some extra calories are slipping in somewhere. But a loss of more than two pounds a week means you are getting too few calories.

If you have never tried this scientific way of taking off the pounds, you will be surprised at how well and happy you can feel while reducing.

Sandwich for Men

Try this new sandwich on the men: Mix equal portions of finely chopped celery and crabmeat, season with chopped sweet pickles, salad dressing and Worcestershire sauce and spread on the buttered slices of rye bread. Some men like them toasted.

Over the Coffee Cup with Th. Wilkins

Henry Fielding (1707-1754) wielded a mighty pen. Amongst other good ones, he wrote: "We must eat to live and live to eat."

Eating with some folks is just a habit which permits them to stay alive . . . They'd prefer to take food in tablet form entirely, if possible. Others have found out about Wilkins Coffee and annoy the cook half to death asking, "Florence, is breakfast ready?"

Wilkins is better coffee

Rhubarb Makes Appealing Dishes

RHUBARB is making its appearance in the markets. Its tender pink stalks make excellent sauce, pies and also an appealing sherbet. Combined with orange and pineapple juice to make the sherbet it provides a dish full of vitamins. Make it this way:

Rhubarb Sherbet—Cook 4 cups cubed rhubarb with 1 cup of water until tender. Boil 1 cup of sugar and 1 cup water together for 5 minutes. Add ½ cup white corn sirup and chill. Combine ¼ cup orange juice, ¼ cup pineapple juice and 2 tablespoons lemon juice, with 2 cups rhubarb pulp and then add to the chilled sirup. Freeze with the refrigerator set to coldest for 40 minutes or until firm. Remove from freezing compartment to a chilled bowl, and add 2 unbeaten egg whites and beat until fluffy. Return tray to refrigerator and continue freezing until firm about 20 to 25 minutes. Serves 8 to 10.

Rhubard Scallop with Meringue is a delightful dish to look at and just as delightful to taste. Make it this way:

Wash and peel ½ pound rhubarb and cut in 1-inch pieces. Add 1 cup granulated sugar, grated rind of 1 orange and ¼ teaspoon salt, mixing well. Cut sponge cake in thin slices; line bottom of greased baking dish with 3 or 4 slices; cover with ¼ of rhubarb. Continue to make alternate layers of cake and fruit until material is used. Cover and bake in moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 30 minutes. Beat 2 egg whites until stiff; add sugar slowly, beating until blended. Pile on baked pudding and bake 15 minutes longer, or until meringue is slightly browned.

If You Won't Diet Or Exercise, Here's A New Machine

If wishful thinking could produce a Sylph-like figure, not even the laziest woman in the world would tolerate excess poundage or inches. But it's easier to wish than to diet or exercise. Lack of time and energy, as well as so-called laziness, are factors that make women put off reshaping or perfecting their figures.

Especially invented for those who want to reduce their measurements (hips, thighs, arms, etc.) without dieting or exercising is a new machine that does just that. A local beauty salon recently installed one. A graduate nurse gives the treatment, which is followed by a brief massage. You can lose from 1½ to 5 inches on any part of the body in a few treatments.

Here's how it works. You recline comfortably on a couch and read, smoke or sleep. Pads are placed on the parts of the body you want to reduce in measurement. These are connected with the machine. A time clock keeps accurate check on each phase of the treatment, which consists of three parts: Rhythmic (30 minutes, contraction of muscles, equivalent to 5-mile walk); vibratory (10 minutes, helps remove end products of waste material); sedative (soothes nerves and acts as tonic). While the inches are being taken off, you may have a facial with a special attachment that helps to prevent crowsfeet, eliminates wrinkles, smoothes a crepey throat and tones the muscles of the face in general.

Peasant Art Of Balkans Among Finest

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

Maybe the Balkans mean politics to you, but to us those little countries tucked so strategically into the map of Europe mean people . . . people who have evolved a gay vernacular of peasant art, reflecting a way of life that had many fine, sturdy qualities.

The people of the Balkans have always lived simply, close to the earth. And so it has been in the basic crafts, weaving and embroidery, that their talents have been best expressed. In brilliant peasant designs, with vogorous colors and imaginative symbolism, the Balkan countries have made poignant contribution to our repertoire f informal decoration—and at the same time they have created fabrics to embellish their otherwise meagerly furnished homes.

The motifs are not only provocative from a decorative point of view, but they're delightful also in their implications. Sprays of wheat symbolize a bountiful harvest and years of plenty, while roses mean love. Oak leaves symbolize forest lore and legend, and the shadow of the cross is the motif for disaster. In addition to the symbolic motifs, many other designs found in Balkan embroideries reflect the tides of history that have swept over those lands, such as the fleur-de-lys, Napoleonic soldiers, Byzantine motifs and details of many national flags. Then there are all the individual motifs, which curiously enough the men cling to even more tenaciously than the women. These identify the owner as belonging to a particular family or village.

Traditionally the peasant embroideris of most Balkan countries are flat and the same on both sides, and often cover the fabric so completely that the ground color is hardly discernible. The fabrics used for the embroidery are hand woven, and they're very coarse by contrast to the pillow laces made by Balkan women which are as gossamer as spider webs yet of linen thread that gives then great strength.

Mary Haworth's Mail

After Eight Months' Courtship, and One Proposal, Man Tells Girl, Who Has Learned to Love Him, That He Doesn't Know His Own Mind; What to Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: After eight months of steady dating, the man I love informed me last night, quietly but firmly, that because of misfortunes in my family, he had not wanted to break my heart by telling me that, while he loves me, he just doesn't know how much. He is sure the strong physical attraction we have for e ach other definitely clouds the issue; and he says he just doesn't know what love is. I am ashamed to admit I didn't take it like a lady; for I burst into tears.

Four months after I met him, he proposed. But because I thought it was moon madness, and didn't want to take advantage of a moment of weakness, I said "no." Since then, he has evaded the issue. His mother is pretty important to him and, to put it mildly, she doesn't approve of me. She must have her reasons; but families of other boys I have known have always liked me very much.

Here are some of her "counts" against me: 1. I am older than he (three years; although she thinks it's just one year); and therefore would always boss him. (I've tried not to do that very thing). 2. I am a bad influence on him. (I don't drink or smoke and I have tried to live a life my mother would approve.) 3. It is mere infatuation and I have him under my "spell." (I am pretty; but no Hedy Lamarr). 4. I am not the girl for him. (I am a college graduate and we belong to the same church). 5. I am from the North, and he from the South; therefore, I am not to be judged by girls he has known, as they are different! (From which I infer that girls from the North just aren't as nice).

6. I live away from my family. Therefore, who is to vouch for my character? (In the final analysis, doesn't each individual vouch for his own character?) 7. I am determined not to let him go, because I want to make a good marriage and will hold him at any cost. (I have had offers of marriage before, from wealthy boys and intelligent ones.) 8. She refused to invite me for Christmas because it would be, said she, an admission to everybody of his serious intent. (He went home after I went away to visit friends of my family.)

9. She says he should be away from me for at least a year; that he never did have any sense where girls are concerned. 10. He says she is jealous (as all mothers are, he claims), but that, after all, she is his mother and he is all she has to live for. He also says she sacrificed a lot to put him through school, as his father died when he was small. He is 29 now and I am 32.

So now, Miss Haworth, he is gently letting me down; and I think he pities me. I want to come out of it all with flying colors; and to overcome the faults he has found in me,—including taking little things too seriously. I want to avoid becoming bitter; to make this heartbreak a stepping stone to becoming a finer, more understanding person. Right now, I am too numb and bewildered to think straight;—but I must plan some course of action. Please tell me where to start.

Incidentally, his statement of attitude amounts to this: He would like to continue seeing me, but he isn't thinking of marrying, and it's up to me. He telephoned me at noon today (a habit he had) and we chatted, but where does it lead? A feeble hope—which must not be—stirred in my heart. During the past year my brother and mother died suddenly, and now my father is facing a serious operation. So I feel the need of a steadying hand. Gratefully,

REGULAR READER.

Man Is Victim Of Mother's Selfishness

DEAR R. R.: This mother has no intention of releasing her son from "the silver cord." She doesn't want him to marry anybody—hence the subtle poison of her attitude toward all girls he has ever been attracted to, as indicated by her blunt avowal that "he never did have any sense where girls are concerned." She has assidiously conditioned him to distrust his own judgment regarding women, so that she can always step in, when the relationship waxes serious, and deal the gal a knockout blow with a decisive, "thumbs-down" opinion. Least of all does she want him to marry a girl with a mind of her own, a girl of independent spirit and considerable social competence—a girl, in brief, of mama's own stripe, who might give mama a heavyweight tussle for possession of her son. Hence the "all out" nature of her attack upon your background, personality, characteristics, etc., etc.

Her refusal to concede you an iota of toleration amounts to a left-handed compliment. You have had the lady really panicked. You represent dangerous competition. With you for a wife, the boy wouldn't need to go on leaning on mama. You are a mature personality, potentially capable of answering her son's every need of companionship,—emotionally, intellectually, spiritually and socially. Yes, sir. You've had mama sorely worried. And she's been letting you have it, where the chicken gets the axe, every time your name came up.

I suppose she has given her son to understand there is something pretty dark and untrustworthy about a strong physical attraction between a man and a woman—particularly since that is one ground on which she can scarcely hope to fend with any feminine rivals for his heart. And he, poor boob, is constrained to admit that while he loves you, he doesn't know how much. In my opinion, he loves you as much as he is capable of loving any woman, at his present mother-dominated level of psychological development.

But since he doesn't know what he feels or thinks; and, therefore, in his emotional relationships, doesn't, for the most part, know what he is doing or why,—a woman would be running a perilous risk in marrying him. He cannot really give himself in marriage unless and until he casts off the mental swaddling clothes in which his mother is binding him, and establishes himself as an emancipated adult among adults. Supposing he were to get married, in a mood of transient rebellion against his mother's subtle tyranny, on the optimistic assumption that he could "bring her around,"—he would find her implacably opposed to the accomplished fact; and no doubt he would shortly thereafter flop back into her lap, suffering from an enormous sense of guilt and expecting his wife to collaborate with him in abjectly supplicating forgiveness.

In view of his indecisive conduct—up to and including his telephoning you at noon the day after the night he had renounced you forever—I think you should wash your hands of him, abruptly, completely and finally. In dealing with him, you are dealing with a person who, actually, "isn't all there." He is too identified with, too submerged by, his mother—to be reckoned a clean-cut, wholly responsible human being. In getting "mixed up with him," as the saying goes, you were inevitably consigning yourself to just the bewildering, benumbing situation in which you now find yourself.

As a starting point for your campaign of recovery from heartbreak, I give you this interpretation of his undependable behavior. Your subsequent plan of action should be designed to keep you busy, professionally and socially, 12 to 14 hours a day, from now until you have found a really satisfying new heart interest.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Hurry, Kids, to Big Fun Show And Help the Blood-Bank Fund

There's 1,900 Seats at 15 Cents Each To See Your Hero, Hopalong Cassidy

Ten o'clock this morning is the time and the Tivoli Theater, Fourteenth Street and Park Road Northwest, is the place for the biggest all-juvenile benefit for the Children's Hospital blood bank.

Treating themselves to about two hours of fun and at the same time doing their bit for hundreds of sick and injured children, boys and girls from all parts of Petworth, Park View, Brightwood and Mount Pleasant will descend on the Warner Bros. neighborhood house to the number of an estimated 1,900, which is capacity.

Conceived primarily as a means whereby children could, at 15 cents a head, help keep the blood and serum bank in operation, the benefit movie party won't bar their elders, however. They will be welcome, at a quarter each.

The feature picture will be "In Old Colorado," a Hopalong Cassidy film, garnished with several cartoon comedies.

Meantime, Fort Stevens Post, American Legion, pledged a minimum of $50 to the blood bank fund, the money to be raised at a party tentativxely set for April 19. Joseph A. Ashi is commander of the post, with Donald Stanley, vice commander, chairman of the party committee.

Benefits scheduled for tonight include those of three other legion post: Government Printing Office, Washington Police and Fire and Bunker Hill.

Parties whose proceeds will go into the Children's Hospital blood and serum bank fund were given last night by the American Legion's Sergt. Jasper, Stephen P. McGroarty and Government Printing Office posts, the latter spreading its activity over two nights.

Principal nonlegion event yesterday was a dance given in the Colonial Village Community House, supervised by Jacob Blake, Mrs. George E. Youngblood and J. T. Onley.

Rural Youth Guidance Unit Ends Session

Migration of rural youth to cities and to other sections must be "a carefully selected migration," with more effective guidance on job opportunities and on their own aptitudes being provided to help boys and girls make their decisions," it was agreed by the Institute for Rural Youth Guidance yesterday.

Leaders of the institute, which closed yesterday, will meet today to crystalize the two days' discussions in to a report, expected to contain recommendations on ways for better meeting the needs of rural youth. Dr. O. Latham Hatcher of Richmond, Va., president of the board of the Alliance for Guidance of Rural Youth, presided at the sessions held at the National Education Association Building, with approximately 125 persons in attendance.

"The spirit of the institute was far from being defeatist, although we realize the size of the problems to be solved," said M. M. Chambers, recorder of the institute, after it closed. "Sometimes when groups hold meetings on such problems they take a Calamity Jane attitude, with wringing of hands. But this meeting revealed a reasoned and tempered optimism.

"Althought some rural youth must migrate, those who have aptitudes for farm life must be helped to see how they can make effective use of those aptitudes," he went on.

Harry A. Jager of the United States Office of Education addressed the Institute yesterday on vocational guidance education. Mrs. Roosevelt consulted with the Institute attendants Thursday.

Mrs. Xander, 88, Dies; Funeral Set for Monday

Mrs. Sophie Xander, 88, a resident of Washington since 1872, died yesterday at her home, 4531 New Hampshire Avenue Northwest. Funeral services will be Monday at 2 p. m. at the residence. Interment will be private.

Active in charitable work, Mrs. Xander was the widow of Jacob Xander, Washington businessman, who died two years ago. At one times the Xanders maintained a home near Fort Washington, Md.

A native of Germany, Mrs. Xander came to this country at the age of 19 and married Mr. Xander in 1874. She was a member of the Concordia Lutheran Church and affiliated with many charitable organizations. She is survived by a nephew, Adolph Braun, who was adopted by the Xanders, and other nephews and nieces.

Caswells Give Party Honoring Mrs. Robbins

Not even a snowstorm could keep people away from the cocktail party which Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell gave yesterday afternoon. Everybody invited came, skidding in cars or on foot, and it was long past 7 o'clock before the last guest went home.

The affair was in celebration of the birthday of Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins. It was also somewhat in the nature of a welcome to Mrs. Robbins from many who had not seen her since her return from South America. Yesterday she was handsome as ever in a black crepe frock with a matching hat and flowers tucked in at her belt.

There is something extra-special about the Caswell hospitality, with both host and hostess helping to hand the food themselves and seeing that everyone has a good time. Mrs. Caswell wore a floor-length dress of beige with a panel of ostrich feathers trimming the skirt. In the dining room a bar had been set up, as well as a tea table centered with a variety of good things to eat. On the piano in the drawing room, with its walls tinted a soft green, was a huge basket of spring flowers.

Spring Hats Disappear

Most of the pastel hats seen around lately seemed to have disappeared, as people went back into winter clothes because of the snowstorm. And black is still the favorite for the afternoon, judging by the number of dresses seen in this shade.

Mrs. Arthur Vandenburg dropped in, bringing the regrets of her husband, who was unable to get away from his duties at the Senate. Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, topped off her fur jacket with a sapphire colored hat.

The Peruvian Ambassador, Manuel de Freyre y Santander, compared notes with Mrs. Marion Warburg, who is settling down again after a trip to the Dominican Republic. Mrs. Warburg's muff of silver fox matched her tiny hat trimmed with this fur.

Mrs. Noyes Lewis, just back from Florida, chatted on a bench in front of the fireplace with Mrs. Arthur Krock. Mrs. Atherton Macondray told friends of plans for the coming Virginia tour to raise money for British relief.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert were present, she wearing a silver fox jacket with her black dress. Mrs. James Hamilton Lewis was congratulating Mrs. Robert on her successful luncheon of Thursday.

Countess de Zoppola chatted with E. Pendleton Turner, who is leaving soon for a holiday in New York. M. and Mme. Edgar Prochnik told of the perils of crossing slippery Twenty-fourth Street—they live just across the way from the Caswells.

Several There From Navy Circles

Former Senator Hiram Bingham sat on the sofa to chat with the guest of honor. Mrs. Bingham was in a group which included Mrs. Henry Latrobe Roosevelt and Mrs. Eldridge Jordan.

Mrs. Martin Vogel came in with her niece, Baroness Stackelberg, and Baron Stackelberg. The baroness topped off her black outfit with a dark red flower turban.

Commander and Mrs. Hamilton Bryan were present, as were the Naval Attache of the British Embassy and Mrs. Pott. Mrs. Sydney Lee, just back from Florida, was smart in a black dress with a touch of green at the neck. Mrs. Randall Hagner was also among the guests.

Others included George Williams, Mrs. Wallach Merriam, who wore a brown ensemble; George Abell, Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, who had to rush off to keep a dinner engagement; Tinsley Garnett, and Mrs. Eugene Carusi, in a becoming gray cloth suit.

Mrs. Freehof Gives Party for Hutmans

Mrs. Nathan Freehof, of 307 Decatur Street, entertained at a surprise buffet supper last night in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Hutman, both of whom were celebrating their birthdays and also their tenth wedding anniversary.

Several other parties in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Hutman will take place over the weekend.

Mrs. Wallace Is Hostess At Informal Tea

Several dozen tea-going guests spent most of their time in taxicabs yesterday afternoon. The wintry weather, of course, was responsible, and traffic broke all records for slow motion. All parties on the calendar got off to a late start and one or two continued until long after the dinner hour.

Small and delightfully informal was the late afternoon fete given by Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Vice President. She had invited in a few friends for "A cup of tea after 5 o'clock." Neither a party nor a formal at home, the gathering was merely one in a series at which Mrs. Wallace will be hostess this season.

Mrs. Wallace Prefers The Informal Touch

Having few social precedents to live up to, since her immediate predecessor entertained most infrequently, Mrs. Wallace can do about as she pleases in the matter of formal and informal entertaining. Right now she prefers to gather in small groups rather than to receive several hundred friends at one time.

The attractively furnished Wallace apartment in the Wardman Park Hotel was decorated yesterday with low bowls of cut flowers—roses in pastel tints, gladioli and snapdragons. Mrs. Wallace was smartly turned out in a black frock, accented with a pearl necklace and an orchid corsage.

At a small table drawn up before her chair she poured tea herself. There were no assistant hostesses.

Wives of Several Diplomats Are Present

Among the guests were Mme. Bruggmann, wife of the Swiss Minister and sister of the Vice President, who decided to pass up a couple of other parties because of the difficulty of getting from one house to another. Mrs. Joseph O'Mahoney and Mrs John Overton were there; also, Mrs. Howell Moorhead, Mrs. Nelson Johnson, wife of the newly appointed Minister to Australia, and several others.

Some of those present decided to brave the weather and go on to other teas. Among official hostesses entertaining yesterday afternoon were Mme. Fotitch, wife of the Minister of Yugoslavia, and Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador.

Samuel Bruners Take Georgetown Apartment

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bruner, who have been residing at Wardman Park Hotel, have taken an apartment in Georgetown.

Mrs. Bruner was the former Miss Edith Campbell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Ward Campbell, of Norfolk, Va.

Mrs. Samuel O. Clark, jr., wife of the Assistant Attorney General, is vacationing for a month in the sunny Southland, where she is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. Ansel Northrup, at their home in Bradenton, near Tampa, Fla.

Archduke Felix Is Entertained

Archduke Felix was guest of honor at two parties given yesterday by Mr. and Mrs. George Maurice Morris. One, a luncheon, was for older friends, and the other, a dinner, gathered in a company of young people.

At the luncheon were the Danish Minister and Mme. de Kauffmann; Air Vice Marshal J. C. Slessor of the British Embassy; the Air Attache of the Canadian Legation and Mrs. W. R. Kenny; Mrs. Truxtun Beale, Mrs. Charles Henderson, Mrs. Wilbur W. Hubbard, mother of the hostess; her brother, Wilbur R. Hubbard, and Mr. and Mrs. Sterling Byrd Lacy.

Miss Patricia Morris, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Morris, came down from Vassar to attend the dinner. Others present were Lady Maureen Noel and her house guest, Miss Marishka de Hedry, of New York, daughter of the aide to Archduke Otto; Lieut. Peter Smithers of the British Embassy, Miss Sylvia Szechenyi, John Stonborough, Stuart Preston, who has just arrived to work at the National Gallery; Countess de Baillet Latour and Wilbur R. Hubbard.

Archduke Felix lectured yesterday in the Town Hall series on the subject "Is a United States of Europe Possible?" Prior to the lecture, several Washingtonians appeared on a radio program in connection with Town Hall. David E. Finley, director of the new National Gallery of Art, was interviewed by Leo J. Paulin, executive secretary of Town Hall. Mrs. Truxtun Beale, chairman of the forthcoming Piccadilly Arcade, explained the purpose and plan of that project to Hope Ridings Miller, Post society editor, and Miss Cynthia Davis, daughter of Dwight Davis, who came down from New York, was interviewed about her current work with the "Women Fliers of America," of which she is a director.

Miss Manger's Wedding Today

At her wedding today to Richard Collingwood Beuttell, Miss Isabelle Manger will wear white satin and point d'Alencon lace which has been used by brides in her family for generations. She will carry with her bouquet of white orchids and valley lilies, a lace handkerchief which belonged to her great-great-grandmother.

Miss Manger is the daughter of Mrs. Julius Manger and the late Mr. Manger, of Washington. She will be wed at the Huguenot Memorial Church in Pelham Manor, N. Y., the Rev. Willard P. Soper officiating. Her brother, Julius Manger, jr., will give her in marriage, and a sister, Miss Lillian Manger, will be maid of honor. The bridesmaids include Mrs. Julius Manger, jr., of Bronxville; Mrs. Edward Reeves Soules, of Louisville, Ky., and the Misses Emily Gwyer and Helen Johnson, of Pelham Manor. The maid of honor and bridesmaids will wear frocks made with blue jersey bodices and full white organza skirts. Organza hats and flower fans of pink mimosa and pansies will accent their ensembles.

Henry Beuttell will be best man for his brother and the ushers will include William Muir Manger, Robert Sparre, Philip Brooks, Robert Liverside, Frank Howell and Henry Pierce.

A reception at the Pelham Country Club will follow the ceremony. Upon their return from Bermuda the couple will live at the Hay-Adams House here.

Miss Lowe Becomes Wife of Mr. Berger At Epiphany

Wearing a dark blue dressmaker suit, instead of the traditional white, Miss Jean Lowe, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. C. D. Lowe, of 3429 Oakwood Terrace, was married yesterday morning at 10 to Louis William Berger. The ceremony took place at the Church of the Epiphany, with the Rev. Ze Barney Phillips officiating. The wedding was attended only by relatives and close friends.

Underwood & Underwood.

MRS. LOUIS W. BERGER

The bride was given in marriage by her father. With her suit she wore a matching hat and a corsage of white orchids. Mrs. Robert Neely, her matron of honor, had chosen gold wool with a brown chapeau and a cluster of green orchids. Jack Norris, of Pittsburgh, was best man.

After a wedding trip to Florida, the couple will go to Miami for the spring. The bride attended Goucher College and is a member of Delta Delta Delta Sorority.

Mrs. Tanner Wed To Maj. Syme; To Live in Georgia

Only members of the immediate families were present yesterday when Mrs. Margaret Hertford Tanner and Maj. Leander Dunbar Syme, U. S. A., exchanged marriage vows.

The ceremony took place at noon at the home of Maj. Syme's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Conrad Hunt Syme, of 3458 Macomb Street. Chaplain Ivan L. Bennett, of Fort Myer, officiated. The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Maj. Kenner F. Hertford, and her only attendant was little Margaret Hertford Wilson. Maj. Syme was attended by his father, Conrad Hunt Syme, and his brother, Samuel A. Syme.

Immediately after the ceremony the couple left for Fort Benning, Ga., where the bridegroom is stationed. Members of the family who came to Washington for the wedding were Mrs. Boyer Gonzales, of San Antonio, Tex., aunt of the bride, and Mrs. Lafon Riker, of Harrodsburg, Ky., aunt of Maj. Syme.

Evelyn Swarthout, Pianist, Arrives

An attractive newcomer to Washington is Evelyn Swarthout, concert pianist, who arrived by plane from Waco, Tex., last night to join her husband, James P. Hayes, assistant manager of the National Symphony Orchestra. The couple has taken an apartment at Winthrop House, 1727 Massachusetts Avenue.

Miss Swarthout has just completed a concert tour of the Middle West and Southwest. Between engagements she visited her parents, Dean Donald M. S. Swarthout, of the University of Kansas, and Mrs. Swarthout at Lawrence.

The singer was a pupil of Tobias Matthay for three years in London and is now a member of the board of directors of the American Matthay Association. She was recently on the staff of the Masters School at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.

The ceremony, which took place in Knoxville on Sunday, February 23, was attended by the immediate families of the bride and bridegroom. The Rabbis, Aaron Volkman, father of the bridegroom, and Jerome Mark, of Knoxville, officiated.

Capital Whirl

By Sally Swift

THE downstairs rooms of the Belgian Embassy are permeated these days with a delicious smell of fresh roasted coffee which can be traced to the study just by the front door. Here mountains of neatly wrapped, square parcels contain comforts for Belgian prisoners. Coffee, soap, warm socks, and scarves are among the treasures packed by patriotic ladies who work at the Embassy all day.

Arriving to dine with the Ambassador the other night guests remarked on the smell of coffee and, when it was explained to them, fell to picturing the joy of a hungry and cold prisoner when presented with one of those aromatic packages. From prisoners of war thoughts turned to the Belgian government in exile, for among the company that night were Paul van Zeeland, a former Prime Minister of Belgium; Anthony Biddle, who is going to London as United States Ambassador to the exiled government, and, of course, our popular host, the Belgian Ambassador to Washington.

Acting as hostess for the Ambassador—Countess van der Straten-Pontoz is visiting her family in Argentina—was beautiful Baroness de Gruben, wife of the Counselor of the Embassy, wearing one of those absolutely plain, black gowns which are so chic. Baroness de Gruben's stunning huge ring turned out to be an heirloom of her husband's family, a white topaz with the family crest exquisitely engraved.

RANKING GUESTS were Senator and Mrs. Warren Austin, she in a spring-like evening gown of pale, sage-green crepe with scarlet flowers printed on the jacket. On Count van der Straten's left was pretty Mrs. Millard Tydings. Another glamourous lady was Mrs. Anthony Biddle, whose black frock was strewn with large, coin-dots of silver nailheads. Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins was being told that she must never again desert Washington for so long a trip as her recent eight-month jaunt to South America. She looked charming in sheer black embroidered in bunches of white flowers.

Others present were Mr. and Mrs. Orme Wilson—he was formerly Counselor of the United States Embassy in Brussells—, Senator Tydings, Mrs. Robert Low Bacon, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Feis, Mr. and Mrs. Patrick Hill of the British Embassy, Mrs. Mahlon Pitney, Jacques de Thier, and Baron de Gruber, who was giving a very amusing account of his trip to New York from which he had only just arrived in time for the dinner.

DINNER the very next night with Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings—and I could dine in their company every night and enjoy it more each time—was very informal and great fun. Senator Jimmie Byrnes and Senator Tydings seemed to inspire each other in the telling of anecdotes of senatorial life which kept us in gales of laughter. The Australian Minister and Mrs. Casey were very much enjoying these sidelights on American politics. One of the gentlemen present claimed credit for having tutored Mr. Casey in the mysteries of the Electoral College at election time last fall. The self-styled tutor also remarked that the whole set-up had been much simpler for him ever since his young son started calling it the "Electrical College."

Mrs. Casey was very smart in a spring print of gay red flowers on bright blue. Mrs. Byrnes, who is most attractive with snowy hair and a sunny smile, wore black as a background for a sparkling string of crystal beads. Mrs. Tydings wore a black satin dinner dress embroidered in gold and Mrs. Hamilton Bryan wore a beautifully fitted gown of bright Scotch plaid.

Later in the evening Senator Tydings and one of the guests were persuaded to try out the new, little upright Steinway which was a recent birthday present to Mrs. Tyding's little daughter from the child's grandfather.

Mrs. Baldwin Fetes Son, George, And His Fiancee

Entertaining in honor of her son, George H. Baldwin, jr., and his fiance, Miss Mildred Rhett, who will be married this afternoon, Mrs. George H. Baldwin gave a buffet supper last evening at the Carlton. The couple who have been widely feted all week, will be wed this afternoon at the Sulgrave Club.

At noon today Mrs. William Mackall will give a luncheon for the wedding party and out-of-town guests here for the ceremony.

Among those who attended the buffet supper were members of the wedding party including Miss Marjory Clark, of New Orleans; Miss Henrietta Baldwin, of Jacksonville; Miss Louisa Popham, of Charleston; Miss Marguerite Reeves, of Charleston; Miss Polly Read, of Charleston; Kennedy Bryan Parker, Daniel McGoodwin and R. Goodwin Rhett, jr.

Others attending the pre-nuptial party were Judge Richard Whaley, Dr. and Mrs. John E. Parker, of Orange, N. J.; John E. Parker, jr., of Orange; Robert R. McGoodwin, of Philadelphia; Robert R. McGoodwin, jr., of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. David D. Irwin, of Winnetka, Ill.; Mrs. David B. Winnetka, David B. Irwin, of Hartford, Conn.; Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Lawton, jr., of Savannah, Ga.; Mrs. Thomas Hilton, of Savannah; Mr. and Mrs. Eric Morrison, of New York; Duncan MacDouglad and William Campbell, of New York. Also at the party were the bride-elect's parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. Goodwin Rhett.

House Members To Aid at Party

In the line will be Speaker Sam Rayburn, the majority leader, Representative John W. McCormack, and Mrs. McCormack; Senator Hattie Caraway, and Representatives Joseph Martin, Jeannette Rankin, Frances Bolton, Jessie Sumner ad Margaret Smith.

Pouring tea and coffee will be Mrs. Peter Gerry, Mrs. Benton McMillin, Mrs. Robert Lowe Bacon, Mrs. Frances Parkinson Keyes, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Mrs. James M. Helm, and Mrs. Clara G. McMillan.

Mme. Ertegun Gives Second 'At Home' Party

Entertaining at the second in her series of "at homes" Mme. Ertegun, wife of the Turkish Ambassador, received yesterday afternoon at the embassy between 5 and 7 o'clock. Guests coming in from a snowy day found a cheery fire blazing in the hearth of the embassy salon and spring flowers abloom on the tea table. The hostess wore a pale green crepe frock.

The tea table boasted of a host of cakes, cookies and sweets. Pouring throughout the afternoon were Mme. Hassan, wife of the Egyptian Minister; Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican Minister; Mrs. Merchant Mahoney, wife of the Commercial Counselor of the Canadian Legation; Mme. Coste, wife of the Charge d'Affaires of Hungary; Mme. Depasta, wife of the Minister Counselor of the Greek Legation; Mrs. J. Fred Essary and Mrs. Frank Bohn.

Finns Need Aid, Procope Tells League

Envoy Describes Need for Continued U. S. Assistance At Luncheon Here

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor

"Imports can get through to Finland and we need imports, but our funds are running low; Finland as a nation needs help from you."

That was the message of Finnish Minister Hjalmar Procope yesterday at the luncheon given at the Raleigh Hotel by the American League for Finnish War Orphans in observance of Kalevala Day. He expressed gratitude for the credit which had been extended his country, but which is now exhausted and for the continued help of the American Red Cross and other groups of American friends.

"With regard to the aid received from the other Scandinavian countries during the 1939-40 war," Mr. Procope stated, "we got help from almost all parts of the world. This country gave us assistance and moral support and particularly our nearest neighbors, the other Scandinavian countries, Sweden, Norway and Denmark. Sweden especially lent us a helping hand within the limits they thought possible. They gave us help in money and in volunteers. The Swedish help, reaching in money figures about $100,000,000, was particularly of great importance and strengthened our campaign.

"You all know what Finland had to pass through a year ago. We lost lives and territory and wealth. But we saved our status as an independent and democratic country. Finland is not under foreign rule and there are no foreign garrisons within our present borders."

H. B. Elliston, associate editor of The Post and author of "Finland Fights," was introduced by Mr. Procope and told of his visit to Finland at the time of the war. He paid tribute to the high sense of honesty characterizing the Finnish people; to their courage, their religious faith and the quality of their leadership.

He called President Risto Ryti Finland's Alexander Hamilton; Field Marshal Mannerheim, the country's George Washington and Vaino Tanner, leader of the Social Democratic Party, "one of the outstanding cooperators in the world."

Mrs. Robert Lowe Bacon, national president of the league, was presented by Mrs. Emil Hurja, who heads the local branch. Mrs. Bacon introduced the Minister.

Although it had been announced that the luncheon menu would be limited to food to which the people of Finland have now been reduced, it was not. Such a menu was so meager and unappetizing that C. C. Schiffeler, manager of the hotel, refused to serve it, for fear it would reflect on his cuisine. As a result, a simple menu of Finnish dishes which would be a banquet there today, was substituted—canapes, fish with creamed sauce, cucumbers, boiled potatoes and apple tarts.

1,000 Hear Miss Lenroot At B'nai B'rith Unit Luncheon

Underwood & Underwood.

Guests of honor at the annual gift luncheon of the auxiliary to B'nai B'rith at the Mayflower yesterday were seated at the right, Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of Vice President Wallace, and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, photographed with Mrs. Lawrence Koenigsberger (left, standing), president of the organization, and Miss Katharine F. Lenroot, director of the Children's Bureau, who was guest speaker

Nearly 1,000 members and guests of the Woman's Auxiliary to B'nai B'rith attended its annual gift luncheon yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel. Miss Katharine F. Lenroot, chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, and Rabbi J. Marshall Taxay, former president of B'nai B'rith, were the speakers. Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of Vice President Wallace, and Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury and honorary president of the auxiliary, were guests of honor.

Miss Lenroot, who was introduced by Mrs. Lawrence Koenigsberger, active president, discussed "Women's Responsibility for the Care of Children in the Defense." She emphasized three special obligations with reference to children's health and welfare.

"Women must know the kinds of services which are provided in their own communities and so far as possible, in different sections of the country," said Miss Lenroot, "for all the people are concerned in the conditions affecting the development of all our young citizens. They must support in every possible way the conservation and the progressive extension of services which are essential to the development of children and youth into strong, intelligent, determined defenders of democracy," she asserted. "Many avenues for such study and action are at hand, through organizations of women, and of men and women, whose objectives and programs should be geared so far as possible into the requirements of the present critical period.

As women's second obligation, Miss Lenroot declared, "they must be particularly concerned about the conditions surrounding children and youth, the young men in training for national defense, and men and women engaged in defense production, in areas where training camps and defense industries are in operation. Women should know what provisions are being made for housing, schools, recreation, and social protection of youth in these areas, and should act courageously when action is needed to promote safe, clean, wholesome conditions of living, of employment, and of leisure time pursuits."

As their third duty, Miss Lenroot said women "must shape the educational and environmental influences surrounding children and youth in homes, schools and communities, so that they will develop citizens equipped to deal with the problems of reconstruction which will succeed the problems of national defense," she asserted.

"To meet the responsibilities which our position in the world will place upon us and to deal with the problems of economic and social reconstruction at home will require every bit of physical strength, of free and honest search for truth, of clarity of vision, of self-reliance and self-sacrifice, of strength of will, of imaginative fellowship in human suffering, that we can muster," she declared.

Rabbi Taxay emphasized B'nai B'rith's unreserved support of the defense program and its efforts toward extension of opportunity to the underprivileged and the removal of hatred through its educational program linked with the National Conference of Christians and Jews.

Churchwomen Hold Service

Despite the weather, more than 600 women gathered at the Luther Place Memorial Church yesterday morning for the annual day of prayer observed by the Council of Church Women. The Washington service was part of a world-wide observance which was symbolized yesterday by a lighted globe placed before the altar with four candles on either side.

"Thy Kingdom Come" was the theme of the service. It included Scripture reading, prayers in which war victims were remembered, and reports on the projects in which the council has been interested during the year. Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, as president of the council, presented Mrs. O. B. Atwood, who presided. The projects were reported on by Miss Elizabeth Haney of the Y. W. C. A.; Mrs. Josephine M. Stearns, of Indianapolis, representing the Council of Women for Home Missions; Mrs. Charles F. Poe, past president of the Boulder (Colo.) Council; Mrs. Ruth M. Bronson, Mrs. C. C. Hung and Miss Nannie Burroughs.

The dedication service was in charge of the Rev. Charles B. Foelsch, pastor of the church. Others on the program were: Mrs. Fannie Foster, Mrs. J. G. Wickey, Mrs. H. B. Douglas, Mrs. George Ross, Mrs. Ruth Streeter, Mrs. J. L. Frantz and Miss Betty G. Fowler.

Mrs. Leo Tooley led congregational singing with Mrs. Charles A. Whitten at the organ.

Group Battles Snow to Honor Rayburn

Delayed but undaunted by the dearth of taxis and tied-up traffic, members of the Congressional Club and their guests gathered nearer 7 o'clock than 5 for the "5 to 7" tea given there yesterday afternoon in honor of Sam Rayburn, Speaker of the House.

Speaker Rayburn, club officers, hostesses, pourers and others assisting, including members of the Marine Orchestra which played, were all there on time. The reception staff, for nearly an hour and a half, was larger than the number of guests who came straggling in by twos and threes, each group recounting a tale of struggle with the transportation on the icy streets.

Representative and Mrs. W. O. Burgin, of North Carolina, for instance, waited at the Wardman Park Hotel for an hour before they could get a taxi. From the other direction came Representative Karl M. LeCompte, who spent an hour and a half getting from the Capitol to the club. Mrs. LeCompte was already there with her guests, Maj. and Mrs. Hugh Butler.

Club officers, headed by Mrs. John Taber, of New York, were in the receiving line with the honor guests. They included Wives of members of the Texas delegation in Congress assisted at the reception. Assistant hostesses in the dining room included Mrs. William H. Larrabee, Mrs. Joe L. Smith, Mrs. Clyde Williams, Mrs. Jesse Morgan and Mrs. Karl Stefan.

Madame Chairman

THE DISTRICT BRANCH of the League of American Pen Women has something going on virtually all the time at its studio in the Grafton Hotel and art exhibitions of the work of its members form a colorful background for whatever takes place.

Just now oil paintings by Grace N. Ruckman decorate the walls, comprising an exhibition to be formally opened with a tea tomorrow afternoon.

Wednesday, at another tea, in charge of Miss Ivy Lindsley, chairman of the poetry group, all of the poets of the branch will gather. They will welcome as guests of honor Maurice Jarvis, Mr. and Mrs. Murray L. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Kenton Kilmer and Courtland D. Baker.

Mr. Jarvis, who is known for his readings, will present a group of poems selected from the works of branch members.

Mrs. Marshall, coauthor with her husband of "Sonnet Sequences," will give several of their poems. Mr. Kilmer, poetry editor of The Washington Post and son of the late Joyce Kilmer, will read from his own poems, and also speak briefly. Miss Mary Castles, another Washington poet, will sing a group of old songs, and Mrs. H. Lyle Campbell, president of the branch, will conclude the program by telling the story of "Will Shakespeare and His Love."

Miss Elizabeth Tilton, Miss Theodora King and Miss Dawn Disney, daughters of members, will act as ushers.

Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock in the studio, the journalism group, directed by Marie Lomas Bockoven, will discuss "The Illustrated Feature Story," with photographic requirements, picture sources and the "rights" involved in their use.

The poetry group of the branch is one of the most active in the organization, and during the past year many of the members have published a number of poems in newspapers and other publications.

Mrs. Kirby, who writes under the name of Inez Barclay Kirby, has just published her first book of poems, "River Lights," which is a mature work of depth and lyric beauty.

Miss Anna M. Priestley's second book of poems, "Upon a Rock," is just off the press, and is receiving much favorable comment.

Mrs. Ida Elaine James is the author of two published books of poetry, "Glossamered Glory" and "The Deathless Flower."

Althea Todd Alderson is the author of "The Far Call," and Louise K. Dunwell, with one book, "Mountain Symphony," already published, is completing a second. Miss Lindsley's book is "What Matter Time or Tide." Mrs. Paul C. Whitney is another poet who has much fine work to her credit.

The poetry group has met monthly throughout the fall and winter and has made a serious study of poetry writing from a technical standpoint, with the result that there has been a notable improvement in style. There are 50 Washington poets affiliated in membership in the D. C. Branch, and virtually all of them are actively engaged at their craft.

PLAN BENEFIT PARTY—The annual spring card party given by the board of the Woman's Clinic for the benefit of the clinic will be held on Tuesday night, May 6, at the Roosevelt Hotel, it has been announced. Mrs. Roselia B. Shaw is the new president of the board.

Miss Adele Abbott will serve as chairman of the party, assisted by Mrs. Edgar T. Brown, Mrs. Ruth H. Snodgrass, Mrs. Elizabeth Enterline, Mrs. Mary L. Manning, Mrs. Motta Cole, Mrs. George Sager, Mrs. Frank A. Birgfeld, Mrs. Fred P. Trott, and Mrs. Frank G. Manning.

Mrs. Shaw will entertain board members at an informal evening of cards and music following the next business meeting of the board on March 3.

The Unready Republic—'Class Divisions'

By Duncan Aikman.

(The fourth of a series on American defenses.) (Copyright 1941, By The Newspaper PM, Inc.)

How much do we have in the way of "class divisions" in the United States? I know, of course,—because I saw it happen as late as the 1940 campaign—that any political orator can get a loud hand by standing up before the microphone and proclaiming that the American people keep no such animals. But what he is really talking about is social snobbery and a rigid caste system. He means, simply, that even multi-millionaire American employers require comparatively little standing at attention from the work force and that it is still comparatively easy for an underling who invents a new gadget or carbonized drink monstrosity to move upward from the subcellars to the front parlor of the national social life.

But when he gets to the top, all the sub-cellars and front parlors are still there. What, then, if we haven't "classes" in the old-fashioned monarchical caste sense, do we use for social divisions and subdivisions?

The feeling I get from my on-the-ground inspection of the American social structure is that we are producing more and more complex, and in many ways more mutually antagonistic divisions fast. Let's look, for instance, at just the divisions we can see with the naked eye on the economic fronts. I'm not the most meticulous social classifier in the world, but I found seven of them, and seven or eight more important subdivisions. The list, then:

1. The Control Group

These are the people who own enough control over finance and big industry, and through their loans and mortgages enough over agriculture, to determine pretty authoritatively what wheels will go around in the Republic and how fast. If you had enough cash money in the bank, you might start a small steel plant or soft drink factory without their paying much attention to you. But the chances are you could not become a serious rival to Big Steel or Coca Cola without doing it on the control group's terms.

The group is, of course much larger than the "60 families" advertised several years ago as dominating the wealth of the Nation. It includes scores of thousands of the merely medium-rich who derive their incomes from the same sources as the ultra-powerful and therefore share their aims and viewpoints. Furthermore, passionately attached to it is a group I like to call the greater henchmen.

The greater henchmen are the special advocates, attorneys, confidential operatives (super-secretaries and public relations counselors), deputy rulers (plant managers and executive vice presidents), special service renderers (technicians, "rich man's" physicians, etc.) to the really important rich. All that they have—and it's considerable—comes out of the great fortunes, so they are even more inclined to think that wealth can do no wrong than the wealthy are.

The control group is convinced that only one economic arrangement will work for the United States: One in which the major profits of business automatically flow back to the top as investment capital into the hands of the very wealthy and in which the very wealthy determine how investment capital shall be used strictly according to their profit motives. This is the arrangement we have now, and the control group—and the greater henchmen—propose to preserve and run it, world without end.

2. The Enterprises

These are the hundreds of thousands of small businessmen and industrialists—some of whom loom decidedly large against their regional and local backgrounds—who are trying to get themselves established as independent capitalists. Hence, they fight the control group when its use of its powers seems to hamper their competitive urges; become the backbone of "trust-busting," antichain store crusades, even occasionally of public power movements, etc.

But actually the ambition of most enterprisers is to break into the control group. Hence, they want the same basic kind of economic arrangements—sometimes, for people a bit down from them in the economic scale, even tougher ones.

The enterprisers also have their group of lesser henchmen around them—lawyers, smaller technicians, store and shop superintendents, not by any means forgetting politicians. They probably have a larger direct representation in the lower House of Congress than any political party in America.

3. The White Collar Wearers

These are the millions of Americans who do the day's work without manual labor and in their street clothes. For this reason, and because most of them are on a footing of slight social amenity with their immediate bosses, an astonishing number of them speak of themselves as belonging to the "upper" or "better" classes. Depression experiences and fears of job security have made huge hordes—possibly a clear majority—of them mildly "pro-New Deal," but they seldom, as I saw them, feel the need of any fundamental changes in the Nation's economic methods. These might interfere with the hopes they more or less universally cherish of eventually becoming lesser or greater henchmen, or enterprisers themselves.

4. The Highbrows

The teachers and professors, writers and newspaper people, artists and so on; with generous sprinklings of technicians, Government experts, ministers of religion. Scores of thousands of them are just hired hands of the control group and the enterprisers, occasionally important enough to rank as henchmen. Others, particularly of the public school persuasion, are indistinguishable from the white collar wearers. A core of the group, though, is more articulately—if not always more rationally—concerned about organizing the Republic's economics for better mass living than any other of the people's divisions.

5. Labor

Here, to get the picture, you have to divide quickly. The labor front is composed of the skilled and craft workers, fairly well paid as a rule when jobs are to be had; rapidly increasing millions of workers at automatic processes; and, shading off toward the jobless fringes at the bottom, a huge reservoir of unskilled "common" labor. Recent struggles between the craft and the industrial (automatic worker) unions suggest how tight the tensions between these groups are growing.

But while it often fights the control and enterpriser groups, labor is not really working for basic economic changes much harder than its antagonists. Labor is not constructively trying to spread more jobs and higher purchasing power among the masses, but to get bigger returns from the profit system as the control group operates it; bigger wages, that is, from the jobs there are.

6. The Farmers

Here again we must divide into owning farmers, tenant and sharecropper farmers and farm hands, increasingly migratory. Even more than on the labor front, these groups are locked in bitter economic struggles with each other.

The owning farmers, largely because practically all farms are operated on a low profit margin, low cash income basis, are bitterly resistant to projects of better income and higher purchasing power for the groups below them. Furthermore, since costs of equipment and store goods bulk terrifyingly on the farmer's ledger, all of the farming groups tend to oppose all movements and projects—unions included—for raising the purchasing power—wages, that is—of city labor.

7. The Economic Zombies

The jobless and their families, ranging from 20 to 40,000,000 people during the last decade, dependent on one form or another of public or private relief or charity; American society's wards. While virtually all of them, as I met them, want "more help" from this source or that to "tide them over," only a tiny minority have basic changes in the economic arrangements on their minds. All they want is for the old economic arrangements to work "like they used to."

Inspect all these layers and divisions in some huge metaphorical bottle and it becomes clearer from moment to moment how difficult our problems are of coordinating American economics to spread higher purchasing power and better living around; or even just to defend ourselves.

The two most powerful divisions, the control group and the enterprisers, don't want any meaningful changes at all. They have been trained to make a "free enterprise" system work. They have been almost religiously indoctrinated with the idea that it is the only possible system. Their standards of living are geared to the returns which they are accustomed to receive from its profit operations. Their sense of authority, their vanities are bound up in their running it. If, since 1929, they have had any inner uncertainties about their capacity to run it, the net psychological effect has been simply to put them more passionately and less critically on the defensive for the "free enterprise" religion itself. Mr. Willkie in the last campaign merely had to utter a few sacred phrases like "free enterprise" and "the American way" in roaring reverential tones to have these groups eating unanimously out of his hand.

On my travels last autumn and winter, for instance, I walked into pounding surfs of fury practically every time I suggested to members of the enterprisers' or the control groups that shrinking frontiers and man-displacing machinery might make it increasingly difficult to operate a "free enterprise" system without profound modifications. The frontiars would "come back" in vast new industrial developments, I was informed, the moment the Government stopped "interfering" and "restored business confidence," "technological unemployment" was just so much professors' moonshine.

Through my campaign conversations, too, I was led to suspect that the power-holding group hated Mr. Roosevelt less for his relatively middle-of-the-road adjustment policies in economics, than for his having questioned publicly and sharply on numerous occasions their ability to make a "free enterprise" system work much longer.

Even in the deepening world crisis, there is daily evidence that the power groups are finding it difficult to envision a defense coordination system without a "normal" flow of profits and investment capital toward the top. Increasingly their spokesmen are indicating doubts, like Commentator Mark Sullivan's, as to whether a Britain which did not save the "free enterprise" system intact, would be worth saving for any other reasons.

But, for that matter, as we look at the other layers in our bottle, the other divisions of the American people seem to be almost equally in favor of maintaining the system without essential changes. The other divisions are not struggling in cooperation with each other to make the system produce better mass living. In the most part, they are struggling against each other to push themselves upward a little nearer toward the top. Barring minor doles to victims of this struggle, like relief, old age pensions and unemployment insurance, the less powerful groups are taking the system as it is, and trying to make it "work" hardly less enthusiastically than the brokers on Wall Street.

"Psychological Attitude"

Out of these struggles between and within the groups come other—and perhaps deeper—psychological divisions. As I went about the country encountering them, I was impressed with the evidence that, overlapping the obvious economic stratifications, we are developing at least three of what might be tentatively called "psychological attitude" classes.

In all of the economic groups except the lowest, for instance, I met people so interested in "getting ahead"—so dedicated to a national "want-to-get-rich" cult, as it were—that they were virtually deaf and blind to their group interests. One way or another workers and tenant farmers and small businessmen told me that the way to a better living was to rise in the world, rather than plan toward getting a bigger share of the Nation's productive output where you happen to be now. "Why the hell should I bother about what the other guys in the office make?", a youth dentifrice salesman explained himself indignantly to me in California. "My job is to sell enough of this junk to get myself made district sales manager."

Yet this very emphasis on success is producing, as a perhaps inevitable reaction, a kind of a "just-want-to-get-by" counter-group. The "just-want-to-get-by" people are the men and women who have secretly, and often not quite consciously even to themselves, abandoned the "getting ahead" hope; and lost their inner confidence in the process. Unable to live up to the old American tradition that a man does "get ahead," they take out their sorrowing egos in churlish cynicisms. Politics is "the bunk," they told me in endless confidences; Ideas of organization and co-ordination are "the bunk" and success is the identification tag of "lucky phonies." "And what's likely to happen in this war," they sometimes added, "that I should be expected to get excited about it?"

Off to one side, meanwhile, an "attitude class" which somewhere in Texas I christened the "want-to-know-what-it's-all-about" group is developing. These are the intellectuals, amateur and professional, who spend their spare, and sometimes their working, time trying to analyze where American life is going and what is the matter with it that it yields so comparatively little rich living. Some of the answers they reach may be more interesting for ingenuity than soundness. But, good or bad, not much attention is paid to the answers. Neither the just-want-to-get-by nor the want-to-get-rich group is particularly interested in analyses.

For too much analyzing—like too much economic co-ordination either within or between the groups—goes against the grain of the American religion. And tomorrow's article will tell what I found the American secular religion was.

'Protecting The Public Pocketbook Is Merchants' Vital Responsibility'

RESEARCH DIRECTOR OF THE HECHT CO.

Large retail organizations can only continue to grow so long as they act as purchasing agents for the public in their contact with manufacturers of every type of merchandise.

Toward this end, we maintain buying offices in both Los Angeles and New York City, and our buyers cover every important manufacturing center from the furniture factories in up-state New York, down to the cotton mills of the Deep South, and from the style centers of California to the garment manufacturing industries of New York City.

In addition to a large staff of experienced buyers, we have, for many years, maintained a Comparison Shopping Bureau consisting of a number of women, each a specialist in some type of merchandise. One is a student of furniture and furnishings for the home; another has made many years' study of women's apparel; a third is an expert of men's clothing, and so on.

This bureau is constantly checking and rechecking every type of merchandising brought into the store by our buyers, and analyzing them for value, for construction, for serviceability, and checking each item against comparable merchandise available throughout the city.

During the coming "45th Anniversary" we have asked the staff to double-check every piece of merchandise offered for sale to the public in our advertising. Consequently all Anniversary merchandise will be certified for style, quality, and value-rightness.

We suggest that you follow our advertising throughout the Anniversary with every assurance that you will be getting exceptional value for your money.

U. S. Trying to Buy The District Building

The District Building may be purchased by the Federal Government to house the National Defense Commission.

Informal conversations have been held between District and Federal officials. District officials have set a price for the building which would be sufficient to make a good down payment on the proposed second unit of the new District Building. The defense commissioners are scattered over the city and the Administration wants to get them under a single roof.

It's highly likely that the old Defense Commission will be reorganized soon. At present all the defense commissioners report direct to the President. A chairman may be elected who would direct the commissioners' work and report to the President instead of all the members reporting individually. The Defense Commission has slumped in importance since creation of OPM.

Federal Reserve has ordered the defense commissioners out of its building, all except Commissioner Chester Davis, who is a member of the Federal Reserve Board. Leon Henderson has taken over the old REA administrative office on Massachusetts Avenue. Harriett Elliott has moved into Paul McNutt's offices in the Public Health Service. Nelson Rockefeller has moved some of his staff to New York, and Housing Coordinator Charles Palmer has been moved out of the Lafayette Building to an old residence at 1600 I Street. Another move underway is the transfer of 135 employes of the Medical and Inspection Division of CAA from the Capital Wall Paper Building to the airport building at Gravelly Point. CAA will move its civilian pilot training section to the Wall Paper building.

Resentful Senators

Many a Federal official has paid dearly for ruffling the feelings of dignified Senators. This conversation between Senators Truman and Adams recently occurred on the location of defense industries:

"The Defense Commission," remarked Truman, "keeps its own counsel. You can't find out anything about it . . . I have been trying to do it for approximately three months and if you can find out anything you can do better than I."

"If you get yourself fingerprinted and get a photograph," said Adams, "you can get into the building."

"That's about as much as you can do," retorted Truman. "They referred me to 16 people one day and finally I got back to the first one I saw, and I did not get any information."

Navy Department has requested Grove Webster, director of CAA's civilian pilot training program, to supply it with 150 flying instructors. Applicants must not be over 35, they must pass a Navy flight physical and they must have been citizens at least ten years.

2-Shift Schedule Planned for Navy Clerical Workers

Navy Department clerical employes will go on a two-shift schedule starting March 10, it was announced yesterday.

A second shift will go to work in midafternoon, following the regular shift in operation at present. All employes will continue to work a 40-hour week.

The new arrangement was necessitated by the overcrowding of quarters, due to the great increase in the department staff in recent months.

The shifts: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday the first shift will work from 8 a. m. to 3:45 p. m. Friday this group will work from 8 a. m. to 3:30 p. m. and on Saturday from 8 a. m. to noon.

The afternoon shift: On Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday from 3:30 p. m. to 11:15 p. m.; Friday, from 3:15 p. m. to 10:45 p. m.; Saturday, 11:45 a. m. to 3:45 p. m.

A 15-minute overlap was provided between shifts so that workers could exchange instructions and otherwise correlate work.

GAO Building Plan Approved

The Fine Arts Commission has approved designs for the new General Accounting Office Building, to be erected at Fifth and G Streets Northwest, it was announced yesterday. Louis Simon, supervising architect for the Public Buildings Administration, said the design is for a modern brick building with stone trim. The commission also approved contract drawings for a new pumphouse to be built along the Rock Creek Parkway near the Massachusetts Avenue Bridge.

A Golden Fleece for Easter

Several weeks ago Alexandria's city manager, Carl Budweasky, and fire chief, James M. Duncan, jr., ordered new spring suits. They ordered them from a salesman and paid him $4 each on deposit. Yesterday the officials learned they are no more ready for the Easter parade than they were at Christmas. "We have no salesman such as you describe," informed the clothing company.

Wife Likes Shopping

Justice T. Alan Goldsborough of the District Court yesterday refused the request of Albert Greens, 5411 Second Street Northwest, to make his wife keep away from his place of business. Mrs. Greens' frequent visits to his ladies' apparel shop at 3004 Fourteenth Street Northwest are annoying, the husband said. Justice Goldsborough cautioned his wife.

Patterson Cites British Aid to U.S.

Tells Federal Bar Members How We Benefit From Orders And Secret Data

Undersecretary of War Robert P. Patterson told the Federal Bar Association last night that opponents of the lend-lease bill ignore the fact that "we are . . . indebted to the British for many more things than stopping Hitler."

Sharing speaking honors at the association's twenty-first annual dinner at the Mayflower Hotel with Mrs. Roosevelt and Solicitor General Francis Biddle, Patterson declared:

"First and foremost, by aid to England, we borrow time to prepare; time that is so much needed.

"We have also received aid in more tangible form. The British and French defense orders in this country in the early part of the present war have become of immense value to us. It was British and French money that initially created the expansion in essential aviation plants.

Learn Defense Secrets

"We now benefit from British and French orders are experimental orders. We have received most valuable information on antiaircraft defense, on aircraft design and on many other multitudinous materials of war.

"Through the cooperation of the British, this war has become a vast research laboratory, the results of which have been furnished to us to the great enhancement of the efficiency of the weapons of war which we are developing and producing.

"We are not denuding our defenses by aiding England; we are making possible our own adequate defense."

Aid to England, Patterson said, has the support of all the people "except a small group of extreme isolationists, who seem determined that we should fight alone, without allies, and should fight here."

Requires Executive Action

A large part of the "very acrimonious and partisan debate" of charges that the bill gives dictatorial powers to the President, Patterson said, seems "to resolve in large part into a legal argument." Constitutionally, he declared, the President is "the only proper repository" for executive powers, and he is the one to administer the lend-lease program.

"It is the function of the Congress to determine our national policies, but to translate those policies into successful results requires executive action," he declared.

Mrs. Roosevelt conveyed the President's "very good wishes" to the meeting, attended by some 600 Government lawyers and guests.

Urges Respect for Law

"His practice of law," she remarked, "was perhaps limited to a very short time, but he always feels that he knows all about it . . .

"The law of our land is what we should live by and we should always hold it in high respect and it is you who make us do so."

Solicitor General Biddle, in a speech on "Government and the Public," traced the change in conception of government "from that of a policeman to that of an organic body consciously used to promote society's welfare—a change from a negative to a positive emphasis."

Members and guests attending the dinner were:

Joint Study Of Overton Plan Is Set

Hunter to Arrange For Hearings With Senate; Dirksen Will Oppose Formula

Joint hearings on the Overton fiscal formula were assured yesterday when Representative Hunter (Democrat), of Ohio, was authorized by his fiscal affairs subcommittee of the House District Committee to make arrangements with Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, agreed to the hearings but announced he would oppose adoption of the formula.

"It will set a precedent that would bankrupt the Federal Government," Dirksen said.

He explained that if the land-ratio formula were adopted for the District that States, counties, and municipalities which have had large areas taken off the tax rolls by Government acquisition would make claims for Federal payments.

Dirksen stated, however, that he was not objecting to a fair lumpsum payment to the National Capital because of its peculiar problems.

Representative Hunter suggested that "it might not be a bad idea" to consider a general Federal policy for reimbursing localities which lose substantial revenue due to large land purchases by the Government. Such an inquiry, however, would not fall to the District subcommittees.

Meanwhile, the revised amendments to the District income tax were introduced in the House by Chairman Randolph of the House District Committee.

They will be approved first by the Hunter subcommittee and then submitted to the full committee at its regular meeting Monday morning.

Court Rules That Employes Can't Waive Wage Act

Employes cannot waive the provisions of the Minimum Wage Act, setting a bottom limit of $17 weekly their pay, Judge Nathan Cayton ruled in the Municipal Court yesterday.

Judge Cayton gave Mrs. Helen F. Groves judgment for $207 and Mrs. Anna Lore judgment for $206 against Samuel Adelman. These sums were the difference between what the women were paid and what they would have been paid at $17 a week in the nearly 80 weeks they were clerks for Adelman.

Adelman produced receipts, signed by the women, for $17 weekly wages. But they testified they were made to sign the receipts or lose their jobs, no matter what they actually got.

Both women live at University Park, Md.

Two Implicated In Fund Shortage Post $5,000 Bond

Investigation of the Police Court records—which on Thursday brought embezzlement indictments against two ousted court attaches—is still under way.

Assistant District Attorney Krouse said yesterday that the inquiry may require several weeks more, recalling that District Attorney Edward M. Curran ordered a thorough investigation when shortages were suspected.

Meanwhile, James Edward Sullivan, 35, former bailiff in Traffic Court, posted $5,000 bond in the District Court yesterday for his appearance to answer a series of indictments charging him with larceny, embezzlement and criminal conspiracy. Joseph R. Burko, former assistant clerk, pleaded not guilty and posted $5,000 bond Thursday on similar charges.

Clerk Killed In Gun Battle Ruled Suicide

A coroner's jury yesterday declared that Murphy H. Hubbs, 35, former grocery clerk, who engaged in a running gun battle with police Thursday afternoon, died a suicide.

The jury deliberated less than 15 minutes before deciding the victim shot himself with a .32-caliber revolver instead of having been slain by Lawrence E. Buscher, a Traffic Division patrolman, as was first believed.

Powder burns on the man's temple and hat and the fact a .32-caliber slug was removed from his brain proved that Hubbs killed himself on a parking lot at 728 Eleventh Street Northwest.

In the meantime, John E. Francis, 20, of Colonial Village, Arlington, Va., an employe at the Greyhound bus terminal, who was shot when he attempted to halt Hubbs' mad dash, remained in critical condition at Emergecy Hospital with wounds in his chest and arm.

Principal witness at yesterday's hearing was Mrs. Betty Virginia Bowen, beauty shop employe, who told the jury Hubbs had persistently pursued her Thursday for a date.

Last time she saw Hubbs, Mrs. Bowen testified, was about 4 p. m., when he met her in an elevator in a building in the 1200 block of G Street Northwest, where she worked.

"He told me if I did not go out with him that night, he would wait and kill us both (she and her husband) and himself," the witness declared.

She said she called police and Policeman William J. Gaylor responded.

Police revealed at the inquest yesterday that Hubbs bought the revolver at an Alexandria pawn shop Thursday for $10.

Abattoir Purchase Bill Introduced

Senator Mead (Democrat), of New York, yesterday reintroduced a bill which authorizes the Secretary of Interior to purchase for park purposes the site of the Adolph Goble Co. abattoir in Anacostia at a price not to exceed $500,000.

The measure was passed by the Senate last year but was never acted upon by the House. One of its provisions states that the property may be transferred to the District if the Federal Government finds no use for it.

Garden Drive Of Burleith Citizens Opens

Some 200 members of the Burleith Citizens Association last night formally opened a spring garden campaign with a dinner at the Orient Restaurant, on Wisconsin Avenue Northwest. Robert H. Engle presided at the dinner, which is planned to be an annual affair.

King Stone, chairman of the association's parks and gardens committee, outlined plans for the exchange of surplus seed, and gave advice on spring gardening methods.

The Burleith citizens' group planned its drive to promote civic garden interests and to encourage the clean-up of unsightly alleys. Also planned is a program to interest children in gardens.

Main speaker at the dinner was Dr. David Lumsden, horticulturist with the Department of Agriculture. Afterward the association members saw a colored movie, "How Does Your Garden Grow?"

These door prizes were awarded: W. W. Fields, rubber-tired lawnmower; Mrs. Florence H. Reed, 50 pounds of lawn food; Mrs. P. M. Knox, 10 pounds of grass seed.

Draft Quota Is Revised For District

25 Local Boards Must Furnish 1,100 Men for Induction March 3 Through 10

Washington Selective Service headquarters yesterday announced revised quotas for 25 local boards which altogether must furnish 1,100 men for induction March 3-10, inclusive.

The breakdown, amended after some local boards failed to find the required number of Class 1-A men for next week's swearing-in, is designed to level out the draft load by drawing more heavily on boards with greater numbers of potential recruits.

Meanwhile, Third Corps Area officials at Baltimore announced that an additional March requisition of 500 Washington colored men is the Washington representation among 6,600 men from the District, Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania to go into service between the 21st and 31st of this month.

At this time Pennsylvania will call up 4,397 selects, while Maryland and Virginia will supply 938 and 735 trainees, respectively.

Washington men and Virginians will go to the reception center at Camp Lee, Va. Maryland recruits will don uniforms at Fort George G. Meade, Md., and Pennsylvanians will begin service at the New Cumberland, Pa., center.

The revised quota breakdown for Washington local boards:

Board No. 1, 45; No. 2, 80; No. 3, 43; No. 4, 95; No. 5, 75; No. 6, 60; No. 7, 95; No. 8, 47; No. 9, 60; No. 10, 12; No. 11, 10; No. 12, 12; No. 13, 20; No. 14, 50; No. 15, 27; No. 16, 35; No. 17, 44; No. 18, 35; No. 19, 15; No. 20, 90; No. 21, 15; No. 22, 65; No. 23, 25; No. 24, 85, and No. 25, 0.

Supt. Brown Shifts Four Detective Bureau Officials

Shifting of four officials of the Detective Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Department was announced last night by Supt. Ernest W. Brown.

Lieut. John Fowler, now in charge of the robbery squad, and Lieut. Clement Cox, director of the Fourth police district, including Precincts 4, 5, 9, 11 and 12, will be shifted to downtown precincts.

This, it was understood, was a move to prepare them for precinct captaincies. Capt. Lloyd Kelly, of Eighth Precinct, is now on active duty with the Army, while Capt. James E. Bobo, of Thirteenth Precinct, is expected to retire April 1.

Lieuts. Walter Thomas and A. M. Winfree, of detective headquarters, will replace Fowler and Cox, respectively.

Until a successor to Kelly is named, Lieut. Magill Groves will be acting captain of Eighth Precinct.

Hoyas Suffer Fourth Loss Before 1,800

G. U. Holds 22-20 Edge at Half-Time; Loeffler Leads Ram Attack With 12 Points

By Everett B. Morris.
Herald Tribune Staff Writer

New York, Feb. 28.—Georgetown's hopes of gaining an invitation to the impending National Intercollegiate Basketball Tournament in Madison Square Garden were dealt a severe blow tonight when Fordham's young team waxed blistering hot in the second half and whacked the heavily favored Hoyas, 53 to 42, in the big gymnasium on Rose Hill.

The snowstorm which raged outside was as nothing compared to the blizzard of baskets which swirled around the hapless Hoyas when the Rams went on their belated rampage.

Rams Strike Hard

The teams were tied at 33-all with little more than half the second period played when the home forces suddenly found the range. Sparked by Johnny Carroll and George Babich, who had just come into the game in relief roles, the Maroon rolled for 9 straight points. This splurge gave them full control of things for the first time and they never let Georgetown come back.

This unexpected reverse was Georgetown's fourth in 19 games, 14 of which have been played on the road. It was Fordham's twelfth triumph against seven defeats, and by all odds its most impressive.

The first half lacked life and color despite the closeness of the score and the fact that Georgetown was leading 22 to 20 at intermission was traceable directly to Fordham's woeful shooting from outside. Georgetown held leads of 7 to 2 and 10 to 5 before Max Loeffler came into the Fordham line-up and imparted the movement which enabled the Rams to get back into the running.

Rizzi Praised

He continued his work in the second half and kept Fordham in there until Carroll and Babich combined to break things wide open. Loeffler and Irving Rizzi, Georgetown's captain, were the best players on the floor. The Fordham sophomore led the scorers with 12 points, all of them made when the pressure was on. Rizzi did relatively little scoring, but he turned in a great performance trying to hold his wobbling team together.

Fordham overcame the Hoyas chiefly because it had more drive, hustled after the ball and blasted its way into the backboard to make its shots in the second half. Georgetown did little of account from close range and seemed over-intent on its set-shot game. The Hoyas were hitting from outside in the first period, but in the second they lost their touch under the stress of Fordham's aggressive defensive play.

Challedon Underdog In Big 'Cap

By the Associated Press.

Los Angeles, Feb. 28—Mighty Challedon was cast in the underdog role as 16 rivals, headed by the powerful entry of Mioland and Porter's Cap, were named to battle it out tomorrow for the richest prize in turfdom—the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap.

The handsome handicap king of 1940, carrying the racing silks of William L. Brann and the sentiment of thousands of admirers, goes postward in the mile and one-quarter classic packing a champion's high weight of 130 pounds, but few experts give him a chance to conquer Charles S. Howard's Mioland.

Winner of $332,835 in his 29 races, the 5-year-old Maryland stands a chance of raking in nearly $90,000 tomorrow, putting him within striking distance of Seabiscuit's purse-earning record of $437,730, but——

Here, in position order, with Challedon in No. 8, is what he is up against:

1, Wedding Call; 2, Hysterical; 3, Royal Crusader; 4, Viscounty; 5, Woof Woof; 6, Beautiful II; 7, Rough Pass; 9, Bolingbroke; 10, Bay View; 11, Gen'l Manager; 12, Mioland; 13, Porter's Cap; 14, Sweepida; 15, Welcome Pass; 16, Fairy Chant; 17, Can't Wait.

Gloomy skies and conflicting weather guesses failed to dampen enthusiasm for the race. Rain began falling at noon and more was predicted tonight and tomorrow. The track's weather expert, however, promised clearing skies during the afternoon.

Handicappers, meantime, went overboard picking Mioland, and Lady Luck certainly smiled on Howard in the matter of the rain and the drawing for the post positions.

On past performances at the current meeting, Mioland, with impost of 124 pounds, merited the favorite's rank. The Oregon 4-year-old has won three major stakes this season and only a week ago defeated virtually the same field he'll face tomorrow. Whether Challedon, undertrained at that stage and racing for the first time in nearly four months, has reached a peak remains to be seen.

Famed Lightweight Narrowly Misses Kayo in Second But Rallies Gamely

By Bob Considine.

New York, Feb. 28.—Fighting with his hands down around his belt, as he used to do when he was the fastest man in the ring, former Lightweight Champion Lou Ambers leaned into a crushing left hook thrown by Champion Lew Jenkins tonight at the Garden, and in less time than it takes to relate it he was a drooling, dizzy mass, kneeling on the floor looking up at the blinding lights. The technical knockout came after 2:26 of the seventh round.

Jenkins, the bone-studded titleholder from Sweetwater, Tex., almost knocked out the former champion in the second round, when he pinned him against the faded red velvet ropes and hit him with everything he had. But the wily Ambers came out of that crisis like a man finding his way along a well-remembered street in a fog, and won the third and fourth rounds of his return match by dint of a fine stabbing left and upset Jenkins.

Won Title Fight

But Ambers, called the Herkimer Hurricane when he had that old zip in his body, was little more than a zephyr tonight. He weighed 140½ pounds, which automatically made it a nontitle fight. And he didn't have the speed and the reflexes which once enabled him to jig out of trouble, despite his wide-open style of fighting.

Al Weill, Ambers' manager, was screaming "stop it" to referee Arthur Donovan all during that baleful 30 seconds between the time Jenkins landed the payoff left hook until the time that Donovan picked Ambers up from his weary genuflection.

Weill announced Ambers retirement from the ring immediately after the fight, and thus ends a unique career.

Ambers started life as a bootleg amateur fighter, became Tony Canzoneri's sparring partner, whipped Tony for the title, lost the 135-pound crown to Henry Armstong, won it back, and lost it to Jenkins last year. The fighter married not long ago and opened a laundry in Herkimer, N. Y.

Ambers went out, swinging. His left made Jenkins' old scars around the nose and eyes leak a little. The former champion held his own against the murderous puncher in the fifth and won the sixth when Jenkins fouled him. Throughout the crowd yelled madly for him. Jenkins, with five times as much power in his punches, simply waited until Ambers' aging legs were unable to bounce him away from punches.

Hockey Eagles Down Rover Sextet, 5 to 4

By Jack Munhall.

Norm Burns' record-shattering fifty-fourth goal of the season in the final three minutes of play last night gave the Washington Eagles an exciting 5-4 victory over the New York Rovers and boosted the locals into a 2-point lead over Baltimore in the hectic Eastern Amateur Hockey League race.

Before a Riverside Stadium crowd of 1,722 fans who had watched with alarm a late New York rally with which it tied the count at 4-4, Burns broke loose from the pack, grabbed a long pass from Ross Knipfel and at top speed knocked the puck through Goalie Gerry Cosby.

With this shot Burns cracked the league mark for goals scored in a single season, which was shared by Norm Calladine, of Baltimore, and Herb Foster, of Atlantic City, both of whom are now professionals.

Rovers Fight Back

No more propitious moment could Burns have selected for a record-breaking effort, for the cellar-dwelling Rovers had fought back to overcome deficits of 0-3 and 1-4 and threatened to win a match which would have been most damaging to Washington's hopes for its first pennant.

Burns' goal, his first in three games, was the third within a minute and 49 seconds, the Rovers having tallied twice in 27 seconds to suddenly transform what had seemed an easy Washington victory into a tie match. Ed Dartnell and Fred Ferens, both assisted by Wilson and Lotten, had fired swift shots through Goalie Les Colvin and the Rovers seemed ready to roll. But along came Burns.

Washington left at 1 o'clock this morning for Boston, where they meet the Olympics Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Arthur Thompson, recruit from Port Colburn, who was to have reported here in time for last night's match, was detained at the Canadian border. Coach Redvers MacKenzie said he surely would be here in time for Tuesday's encounter with the Olympics.

Beneficial penalties and alert play accounted for the four-goal splurge which gave the Eagles a prohibitive 4-1 lead in the opening period.

Rovers Draw Penalties

Every Washington point was tallied as the Rovers were operating at diminished strength because of successive 2-minute penalties incurred by Wilson, Sullivan and Check.

Mailley, opening the match's scoring at 2:49, counted on a shot set up by Knipfel who, in turn had

West Virginia Beats Temple

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Feb. 28.—Piling up a 20-point lead in the first 15 minutes of play West Virginia's basketball team handed Temple a decisive 47 to 34 defeat before 2,000 at Convention Hall tonight.

The game was the second of a double-header. Long Island came from behind to beat Lasalle, 42 to 41, in an extra period struggle in the opener.

Led by Jimmy Ruch and Rudy Baric, who scored 32 points between them, the Mountainers broke through Temple's defense for repeated lay-up shots to take a 23-3 edge. At the half they led by 24-8 and regained a 20-point lead at 30-10 before the Owls spurted in the closing minutes.

Snead's Sub-Par 279 Wins $5,000 Event

Sam Overcomes Gusty Winds to Finish With Rounds of 68, 72; Gets Prize of $1,200

By the Associated Press

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 28.—Slugging Sam Snead, of Hot Springs, Va., conquered chill and gusty winds from the Gulf of Mexico today to win the $5,000 St. Petersburg Open Golf Tournament with two strokes to spare.

While other scores soared, Snead kept sending his shots screaming into the breeze for rounds of 68 and 72 to clip five strokes off par with a 72-hole total of 279.

Snead's long game was so much better than that of the others in the blustery weather that he could afford to miss a half-dozen birdie putts.

Hogan Tied for Second

The reward was the $1,200 top prize.

Ben Hogan, of Hershey, Pa., who is becoming a chronic runner-up, tied at 281 with Herman Barron, of White Plains, N. Y.; Chick Harbert, of Battle Creek, Mich., and Harold McSpaden, of Winchester, Mass., winner of the Thomasville Open last week. Each collected $525.

Herman Keiser, of Akron, Ohio, holed a 100-yard niblick approach for an eagle on the home hole to earn sixth money of $300 with 282.

Four others tied at 284 to draw down $215 each, among them Jimmy Demaret, of Houston, last year's St. Petersburg winner. The others were Ralph Guldahl, of Chicago, former National Open champion; Sam Byrd, of Ardmore, Pa., one-time Yankee ball player, and Al Brosch, of Farmingdale N. Y.

Guldahl was near the front until he distinguished himself with a big nine on the par five eighteenth hole this morning. His tee shot landed beside a pipe under a bridge, so he dropped out and hit the ball back to the same place. He tried it again, sliced into the creek, and finally wound up by three-putting.

Nelson Hits 65-77

It was P. G. A. Champion Byron Nelson, of Toledo, however, who won the day's spectacular honors. Nelson shot himself into the running wth a magnificent morning 65 and then tacked on an inglorious 77 to finish barely in the money.

Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa., the first day leader, blew sky-high today and wound up out of the money at 287.

Harry Offutt, of St. Petersburg, won the amateur prize with a 295, one shot better than Charles Dudley, of Greenville, S. C.

S. C., Duke Advance in Cage Race

By the Associated Press

Raleigh, N. C., Feb. 28.—Preston Westmoreland, a kid who likes to sing grand opera, stood at the foul line cool as a cucumber tonight and dropped in a basket which gave his South Carolina mates a 37-36 victory over V. M. I. in the semi-finals of the Southern Conference Basketball Tournament.

Just four seconds after his foul shot swished through the hoop the gun sounded ending the game. It was a Hollywood finish for the South Carolinians, who had trailed almost all the way. It was Westmoreland who put them in the lead for the first time, with a field goal with 3 minutes to go. The count was 36-all when he was fouled by Richard Williams.

The Blue Devils rolled over William and Mary, 57 to 42, in the other semifinal game.

Paced by lanky Chuck Holley, center, and Ray Spuhler, a substitute forward with a deadly basket eye, Duke pulled away midway in the first half and was never in danger again. Duke led, 30-21, at the half.

Spuhler caged eight field goals and two free throws to take individual scoring honors with 18 points. Holley had 13 and Tom Andrews, William and Mary forward, led his team with 14.

The finals will be held tomorrow night.

Typists Defeat J. C. C. in Tourney

Torrid rivals tangled last night in the D C. A. A. U. basgetball tournament at Heurich gym, and United Typewriters walked off with a 35-16 triumph over Jewish Community Center in the most bitterly contested battle on the card.

Hal Ifshin, ex-Wilson Teachers star, poured 13 points through the hoop to pace the winners to a 15-7 lead at halftime and a fairly easy victory.

George Archie Talks Little In Nats' Camp

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 28.—Move over, Mr. Sphinx, and make room for George Archie, just as inscrutable and every bit as taciturn. The man who will play first base for the Nats this year came to camp today and he is no flaming personality.

He said he guessed he'd do all right with the Washington club but he couldn't be prodded into any other statement. He's the rookie counterpart of Ossie Bluege, who hasn't committed many more than 20 words in his 20 years in the Washington infield.

We attempted to infuse some enthusiasm in Mr. Archie during our interview toay by reminding him that on some fine summer afternoon this season he'd be called to home plate at Griffith Stadium and be presented with the Sporting News Trophy as the most valuable player in the Pacific Coast League last season.

"I'll take it and run," he said.

Batted .324 on Coast

The Nats new first baseman is a tallish, redheaded, thin-faced fellow, 28 years old, who seems to have won the job by default. No other first baseman on the club can show a record to compare with his performance in the Pacific Coast League last season when he hit .324 or in 1939 when he batted .331.

Griffith Stadium fans will become hysterical over him only if he sizzles at first base and at bat. He doesn't make small talk, and he'll break into print only when he achieves something on the ball field. He's the greatest monosyllabic conversationalist we've ever encountered.

Did Archie like the idea of coming up with the Washington club?

"Yes."

Does he think big league baseball is over his head?

"No."

Had he always been a first baseman?

"No."

He used to play third base at Beaumont?

"Yes."

Did he like playing third base?

"No."

He had a pretty good year on the coast in 1940?

"I guess so."

He's a 170-pounder, unmarried, and a native of Nashville, Tenn. He's on the gaunt side and says that he expects to pick up a pound or two in training. He's never seen Griffith Stadium. In fact, he's never seen east of Cleveland. He has played in three games in the big leagues. Each time as a pinch hitter for the Detroit Tigers in 1938.

Archie landed with the Nats in the draft at the end of the 1940 season. The Washington club

Virginia U. Boxers Score Over Florida

Special Dispatch to The Post

University, Va., Feb. 28.—Virginia's boxing team rang down the curtain on its dual meet season tonight, defeating Florida, 4½ to 3½.

Joe Block, Cavalier bantamweight who had a hand injured in the Syracuse meet last Saturday, won from Al Young, a scrappy Gator fighter, and Clarence Callahan, making his last appearance for the Orange and Blue, scored a T. K. O. over Florida's featherweight, James Hann, near the close of the second round.

John Joca, winner of Southeastern Conference and N. C. A. A. championships last year and undefeated in dual competition this season, took the lightweight match over Phillips Kinsey, Virginia entry, while the welterweight bout resulted in a draw between Ashby Marshall, of Virginia, and Lamar Hancock, of the Gators.

In the junior middleweight bout, John Carruth, of Fort Belvoir, who drew with Robertson, of Navy, outpointed Phil Igou.

Florida produced a finished fighter in James Decourcey, of Duquesne, Pa., in the light-heavyweight bout, who got the nod over Norman Rathbun, pinch-hitting for his brother, Kenneth, injured in the Syracuse match.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Orlando, Fla., Feb. 28.—The spectre of Monte Weaver assails the eyes of Manager Bucky Harris as he works patiently with his young pitchers in the Nats' camp and pleads with them to be smart on the pitching mound.

POVICH

Monte Weaver will always remain as Harris' exhibit A in how not to behave on the pitching mound. No pitcher ever desecrated his natural talents to the same degree as did Weaver who had an incurable habit of telegraphing his pitches to the batter.

He broke in with the Nats as a 20-game winner in his first year up from the minors, but Weaver had little success after that despite a clever fast ball, a tolerable curve, excellent control and the ability to field his position. Big league hitters discovered that Weaver was tipping off his pitch. For a curve ball, he was exposing his grip and for a fast ball he was concealing his hand in his glove.

"I've seen games in which the opposition was calling every pitch before Weaver threw it," Harris was saying. "Joe Cronin at Boston and Del Baker at Detroit would yell to the hitter what was coming when Weaver was winding up, and they would pin his ears back. Monte was a delightful fellow, a college graduate and an intellectual, but he never learned to conceal his grip on the ball."

To Harris, particularly, that sort of thing is important. He was able to play ball ten years in the big leagues himself because he was able to detect such little peculiarities in the pitching. "It added 50 points to my batting average, which was never any too hot," he says. "I was the kind of a hitter who had to be sort of smart up at that plate. I was too small to ride that ball very far.

"I must have hit .500 against one left hander in the American League during the ten years I played. Hit him like I owned him, and he never understood why. I knew, but I couldn't afford to tip him off. He was a big, raw-boned galoot who had both a fast ball and a curve, and I always knew which one I was going to get. Everytime he was going to throw his curve, he'd swallow and I could see that Adam's apple of his bob up and down in his long neck. It was a dead give-away, but I kept my little secret."

It is chiefly from downright necessity, however, that Harris is so insistent that his pitchers learn how to behave on the mound. With the Nats having no high minor league connections, the type of rookies that come up to the Nats are from the lowly bush-leagues and have had little chance to attain the little niceties that make for effective pitching.

One exception, however, and a striking one was Sid Hudson, who came up from the Class D Florida State League last season and immediately impressed Harris with his pitching savvy. The Nats' manager went far out on a limb to predict success for Hudson, but he was not presuming that the rookie was too learned in the art of concealing his pitches or holding runners close to the bag.

Harris assigned big Dutch Leonard to the job of showing Hudson how to inspire in base runners the fear of being picked off, thus cutting down the lead they took. Leonard took Hudson to the mound, and attempted to show him the intricate movements of whirling suddenly from a pitching position and throwing to second base. Hudson dutifully tried it.

After five minutes, Leonard walked from the mound and called to Harris. "Hell," he said, "I can't teach this kid anything about the move to second base. I don't know where he learned it, but he knows as much about holding runners on as I do."

During the season Hudson demonstrated that Leonard was right. Early in the year, American League base runners tried to take liberties with the Class D rookie and he snuffed out many a one to their great surprise. By mid-year they were hunching close to the bag and showing him all the respect they would have for such as Red Ruffing and Ted Lyons and Leonard, who are rated as probably the three top men at holding runners on base.

Base runners know what pitchers to respect and what pitchers they can get gay with on the bases. Joe Krakauskas was a horrible example among the latter sort. By the time he made a move to catch a runner off base, the man was half way to the next base, with the added probability that Krakky had made a wild throw. In contrast, old Sam Jones during many a complete season never made a throw to first base. Runners knew that they couldn't take a long lead against Jones, and so they behaved.

Old Alvin Crowder once confessed to this department his private method of picking runners off base. Crowder, like Sam Jones, rarely wasted a throw to first. When he did throw, he usually got his man. Here's how:

"I never bothered much with the throw to first. I'd bring my hands down in front of me and cock my head at first base in the same position every time. Any time I could see the base runner, I knew everything was all right and that he didn't have too big a lead. If I couldn't see him, that was a lot different. If he wasn't within the range of my vision, he was too far down off base, and he was mine."

Haight Goes Local

Dear Boss:

Somebody has been reading your mail, Boss. Before I send these letters to you my wife reads them and my mother reads them and they like them, but my kids—they laugh. Now those kids couldn't laugh without reading them, so I figured there must be a leak somewhere. My suspicions were confirmed this morning when I found two letters in my mail box.

HAIGHT

One is from E. H. Siegler, of Takoma Park, Md., and refers to that pig pictures. It reads: "Dear Mr. Haight—In your column in The Washington Post of February 25, you have printed a picture entitled, 'Not Haight.'

"A friend of mine and I have had a warm argument over the correctness of the above-mentioned title. He argues that the picture was taken of you after a face-lifting operation, while I contend that no beautician could have done such a good job for you. Please advise which of us is right."

I want you to do me a favor, Boss. Please call your secretary and dictate her a memorandum to wit: "To All Photographers—In the future, any man who eats a pork sandwich for lunch must wash his hands thoroughly before developing pictures of Walter Haight. No excuses will be tolerated."

The second letter is from E. K. Hamil and starts: "Dear Voice of Experience and Liar Extraordinary—In your letters, which I read for some unknown reason, you have made frequent reference to 'Jake.' Is he a real person or just another one of those journalistic day dreams of yours?"

Well, Boss, all that I can say is that if I could invent characters like Jake I would be down to the bank cashing a big check from the Saturday Evening Post instead of sitting here wondering if Moll Motors, Inc. would trust me for a set of skid chains.

Jake is as real as that snow falling outside—a lovable fellow in a grouchy sort of way. His pet phrase of "ain't doing no good" is known from coast to coast in racing, theatrical and newspaper circles. His friends range from a tout called "Horse Thief" to J. Edgar Hoover, of the F. B. I., and his territory from Jimmy Lake's to the White House.

One winter in Florida Jake showed me a letter on White House stationery which, if I remember correctly, read: "To Whom it May Concern—This is to identify Jake Jacobs, of Washington, D. C. Jake is a good boy. (signed)——Secretary to the President of the United States."

I don't know what we of the sports department would do without Jake. He doesn't write in a Spencerian hand and he's no great shucks as an after-dinner speaker but he is a past master of ingenuity and his very nature seems to be built on a foundation of "Nothing is too good for a friend."

One night I was tipped off that the last edition of a Baltimore paper had a story that I had missed at Laurel and I phoned every newsstand in town that I thought might have a copy. Well, I couldn't locate one and had just about given up when in walked Jake on his early evening visit to the sports department.

Jake has a way of sensing when something is wrong and I had to explain about trying to get the Baltimore paper. Jake listened, said, "O. K., I'll get one" and walked toward the door. I yelled to him that I wanted it tonight and he came back with "I know, I know."

In about a half hour Jake marched in with the late Baltimore paper. Later I asked him where he got it. "Simple, simple," said Jake, "I just went over to the Union Station and went through a car that just came in from Baltimore and picked it up off a seat."

That about sums up Jake and ingenuity. Now for Jake and friends:

Well, two of the fellows in the sports department were out to Bowie. They had run out of stuff before the sixth race, as they usually do, and decided to go back to the office. On the way to their car, they met Jake in the paddock, where he generally is. "I've got a sure winner in the seventh race," said Jake.

The two scribes told Jake they were broke and in true Jake fashion he came back with, "O. K., O. K. I'll lend you each a deuce and I'll bet it for you. I'll see you tonight."

Before the seventh race, Jake got a tip on another horse. He decided that it wasn't any use throwing his friends' money away, so he held it and bet 10 bucks to win on another horse. Well, the inevitable happened. The horse Jake bet finished up the race track and the one he was supposed to bet for the sucker was the winner at a $13.60 mutuel.

That night Jake reported at the sports department. He gave each of the unsuspecting scribes $10.40, their profit on the bet that they had supposedly made on Jake's tip and with Jake's money.

That was one occasion when Jake really meant it when he said, "I ain't doing no good."

Always your ace,
POUNDS HAIGHT.

(Dear Haight: You don't have to tell me about that Bowie business — I was one of the guys.—BOSS.)

Brooklyn Dodgers Nose Out Giants in Exhibition Game, 4-3

Paul Dean Chief Victim Of Winners

Hurler Pounded For 3 Runs in 3d Inning; Other News From Baseball Camps

By International News Service

America's national pastime opened its 1941 Grapefruit League season in Havana, Cuba, yesterday with the Brooklyn Dodgers nosing out the New York Giants, 4 to 3, in a surprisingly well-played baseball game. Paul Dean, of the hapless Dean brothers, was the chief Dodger victim. He started for the Giants, went well for two innings and then gave up three runs in the third.

The rest of the baseball news centered around holdouts. The St. Louis Cardinals, in St. Petersburg, Fla., assumed the dominant position in this respect with six players refusing to sign. They are Johnny Mize, the National League's most feared slugger; Shortstop Martin Marion, Catcher Don Padgett, Pitchers Clyde Shoun and Hy Vandenberg, and Infielder Eddie Lake.

The New York Yankee holdout list was pared to three with the signing of Tommy Henrich, George Selkirk and Johnny Murphy. Still holding out were Joe DiMaggio, American League batting champion; Joe Gordon, star second baseman, and Red Ruffing, the Yanks' aging pitching ace.

Outfielders Roy Cullenbine and Myril Hoag and Infielder Don Heffner were demanding more pay from the St. Louis Browns in San Antonio, Tex.

Both Terrapins Lose in Ring Tournament

Special Dispatch to The Post

Columbia, S. C., Feb. 28.—University of Maryland's hopes of sneaking through to an upset team victory in the 15th annual Southern Conference boxing tournament were reduced considerably before 2,000 fans here tonight when the only two Terrapins to climb through the ropes were defeated by technical knockouts.

Unable to press the advantage which sent five of their six entries to the semifinals on byes, the Terps saw their chances practically blotted out by the defeats of 127-pound Charley Dorr and heavyweight Len Rodman. This left only four Old Liners to carry on.

Dorr was stopped by V. P. I.'s Howard Groninger in 1:15 of the third round, and Rodman was the loser to North Carolina's Gales Kimball in 1:58 of the final heat after he had about held his own with his favored opponent in the first two rounds.

Maryland's Len Rodman handled the highly touted Gales Kimball of North Carolina with extreme care in the opening two rounds but the Carolina favorite rallied in the final round with smashing rights and lefts to the face and body that drove the Terrapin heavy into the ropes. Rodman surprised the fans with a well-fought scrap into the opening stanza but faded in the next two rounds. In the other heavyweight fight Warren Wilson, Clemson defending champion, was far in front of Alex Rollison.

The Summary:

175-POUND CLASS—Ben Maynard (Clemson) won by forfeit over Mike Bobbitt (North Carolina). Bobbitt received injury while at North Carolina and was not able to fight.

HEAVYWEIGHT CLASS—Gales Kimball (North Carolina) defeated Len Rodman (Maryland) on T. K. O. in 1:58 seconds of third round; Warren Wilson (Clemson) defeated Alex Rollison (The Citadel) on a T. K. O. when latter unable to return to ring after second round). Referees—Charlie Short (Baltimore), Almann (Duke) and Vince Bradford (Charlotte).

Charlie Young Rolls High Game of 162

High scores apparently run in the Young family, for last night in the Chevy Chase Commercial meet at the Ice Palace, Charlie Young took a leaf from Lucile's book and rolled top scores for individuals with 162 for game and 439 for the set to lead his Hot Shoppes quintet to team highs with 645 and 1,802. Despite the high scores, however, the Royal Tavern boys took two out of three from them.

ARCADIA

Westerman, Coast and Geodetic Survey, led the Department of Commerce men's loop at Arcadia with second highs for the season of 154 and 401. The Patent Office boys took care of the team highs, rolling 612 for game and 1,749 for set, the latter also a second high for the season. In the ladies' division, Miss Smith had top counts of 114-306 to lead her Foreign and Domestic Commerce team to highs of 485 and 1,415.

Gertrude Lugenbell, Charles Grill and Helen O'Dea, Kidwell's Senators, were the leading lights in the Ladies' Independent meet at the Arcadia drives with the former rolling a 141 game that helped her team take all three from Little Tavern while Miss O'Dea's set of 355 sparked a sweep over Shah & Shah and high team totals of 544 and 1,555 as well. The DDW's defeated Paul's Auto Shop three straight and Galliher & Huguely did likewise with United Typewriters.

Softball School Scheduled Today

A softball school for pitchers with Abe Rosenfield as its instructor opens at the Heurich gymnasium this afternoon at 2 o'clock and will continue for several weeks. Youngsters locally can receive free instruction without entailing obligation of any kind and are invited to be present.

Landon Five Wins to End Good Season

Landon School's most successful basketball crew in years closed its regular season auspiciously yesterday on its home court with a 27-21 victory over Richard Montgomery High of Rockville. It was the sixteenth triumph in 20 games for the winners.

Going into the final period it appeared the hosts were to suffer one of their few setbacks when Rockville held a 21-17 margin. Paul Baker and Ted Brawner, however, rammed through 10 points to win in the last session as their mates held Rockville scoreless.

Baker, high scorer of the team, continued in his usual role with 12 points and Brawner came next with 8. Rockville's Monday also had 8 points.

The Landon five's next appearance will be in the Metropolitan Tournament Tuesday against Roosevelt High.

Friends was forced to overcome deficits of 22-12 and 31-18 after the second and third periods to eventually win.

Walter O'Hara Killed In Automobile Crash

By International News Service

Taunton, Mass., Feb. 28.—Walter E. O'Hara, 43, former horse race track tycoon, was killed late today in a head-on automobile crash on the Taunton-Providence, R. I., Highway.

Critically injured were Mr. and Mrs. Edward F. Lounsberry, Simsbury, Conn., who were rushed to Morton Hospital. Both were unconscious when admitted to the hospital and police were unable to question them concerning the accident.

O'Hara, former owner of Narragansett Park Race Track, Pawtucket, R. I., and one-time newspaper publisher, was reported dead on arrival at the hospital. Cause of death was given as "multiple injuries." He was first identified by papers on his person and later by a lifelong friend, George T. Washburn, Taunton newspaperman.

According to police, O'Hara was headed toward Providence when the accident occurred. Police said O'Hara's automobile swerved across the middle of the road, directly into the path of the Lounsberry automobile.

The automobiles met in a terrific crash, which left the two machines locked together in a mass of wreckage, according to officials, who said the motors were torn loose by the force of the collision.

Registry of motor vehicles inspectors said the former newspaper publisher and race track head had obtained his first automobile operating license six months ago. A registry inspector was assigned to investigate the crash with Taunton and State police.

WALTER O'HARA

At one time O'Hara was one of the Nation's leading sports figures as head of Narragansett Park. His disputes with Rhode Island racing officials led to his resignation as general manager of the track after it was closed by National Guardsmen on orders of then Gov. Robert Quinn.

A.N. Five Seeks Tourney Bid InFrayTonight

With a probable bid to the Mason-Dixon Basketball Conference championship playoffs awaiting them in event of victory, American University's courtmen finish their regular season tonight in a game with Johns Hopkins starting at 8:15 in the Eagles' gym. A 7 o'clock preliminary will be between junior varsity teams of the two schools.

A. U. Coach Staff Cassell revealed last night that Paul Menton, commissioner of the Mason-Dixon Conference, promised him that the Eagles probably would receive an invitation to the playoffs, March 7-8, in Baltimore, if they defeated Western Maryland and Hopkins.

Four seniors, including Capt. and Forward Hugo "Dutch" Schulze, one of the school's greatest all-around athletes in history, will be bowing out locally for American University. Besides Schulze, who was captain of the 1940 football team, the departing players are Archie Norwood, forward, and Ernie Webb and Bruce Atchison, guards. These four will be in the starting line-up which will be completed by Center Carl Byham, a junior.

Dudley Gives St. John's Five 38-37 Victory

His solitary point of the game, registered with only seconds of play left, won a 38-37 cage victory for Chuck Dudley and his St. John's High mates yesterday, Anacostia bowing after a torrid battle on its home court.

A few moments after Dudley's crucial foul toss, the Indians' Joe Soresi had a chance to tie things up again, but his shot rolled off the rim.

In taking their seventh triumph of the year against 21 losses, the Johnnies were paced by Dick Hathaway and George Hughes, who tallied 14 and 12 points, respectively. It was their foul shooting, however, which enabled them to stay in the game until the end. Fourteen single-pointers they made good, missing only five. Hathaway dropped eight of the nine allowed him. Anacostia made good on 7 out of 13 charity throws.

V.M.I. Matmen Lead Tourney At Maryland

Special Dispatch to The Post

College Park, Md., Feb. 28.—Virginia Military Institute sent five hardy matmen into the finals of the Southern Conference Wrestling Tournament here this afternoon and tonight as the first two rounds of the annual meet were undergone on a pair of Ritchie Coliseum mats.

Maryland University, the host, managed for only two finalists as Washington and Lee placed four and North Carolina placed three. Davidson and Duke still retained one chance of copping a title, while North Carolina State, the only other entry, saw its last hopeful bow out in night hostilities.

Though two of its entries enjoyed byes in the opening round, Maryland must look to 175-pound Paul McNeil and Heavyweight Bill Krouse, both of whom went through a pair of stiff engagements today, for championships in the title round tomorrow. McNeill, winner over North Carolina's Forrest this afternoon, featured night action when he registered his fortieth straight victory by beating W. L.'s Adams. Tomorrow he will face Swift, of V. M. I., who boasts of never having lost a Southern Conference tiff.

Krouse, the Terps' 240-pounder, reached the finals with a decision over V. M. I.'s Dorrier, who had a bye in the opening round. Tomorrow Krouse tangles with W. L.'s Ailor, who scored an impressive fall over Davidson's Hipp tonight.

Only three falls marked the evening's semifinal round, bringing the total in the meet to five.

Consolations will be held tomorrow afternoon at 3 p. m. and finals at 8 p. m.

The first annual Southern States will bring back to Washington the entire galaxy of champions and stars who recently played in the Eastern tournament here. Tickets to view the matches are going fast,

Joe McCluskey And Munski Enter C. U. Meet

Two prominent track stars were added to Catholic University's eighth annual indoor track and field meet scheduled for Uline's Arena March 10, while Chuck Fenske, star Wisconsin miler, the first to enter, has withdrawn due to illness, it was announced yesterday by Arthur J. Bergman, director of athletics.

Suffering heavy colds and throat infections on frequent occasions this winter, Fenske, on the advice of his physician, yesterday in a letter to Dorsey J. Griffith, director of the annual C. U. games, asked to be withdrawn. Physicians advised the star miler to lay off for the season to regain his health.

At the same time the entries of Joe McCluskey, former Fordham University star distance runner, and John Munski, Missouri University national intercollegiate mile champion, were received. McCluskey, now running under the N. Y. A. C. colors, will show his wares in the new Touchdown Club's feature 2-mile attraction, while Munski will compete in the Killion Memorial Mile event.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Feb. 28.—And still the wonders never cease. We thought the all-time high for overcoming physical handicaps had been reached by George Glamack, of the University of North Carolina, who is the country's best basketball scorer though he has one sightless eye and must often hold one hand over the blind eye while he tries to peer out of the semi-good one.

CONSIDINE

Now comes Bob Gerber, star center of the University of Toledo court team which mets Long Island University Wednesday night at Madison Square Garden. He has as little sight as Glamack, but unlike Glamack he plays with eyeglasses. Last year as a sophomore he made the all-Ohio team and scored 359 points for Toledo. This year he'll easily top that mark. But the thing that really distinguishes Gerber from Glamack is that Gerber affects a moustache, probably the only one in big-time college basketball.

Cup an ear to the sad and puzzling case of Izzy Jannazzo, a New York boy who can't get a fight in New York . . . Though he was something of a hit in Australia, Germany, Mexico, etc. The N. B. A. rates him as the No. 1 challenger for the welterweight title, as does Nat Fleischer, whose Ring Magazine ratings are pretty much the Bible of the clout craft.

Jannazzo, whose number is coming up before his draft board in a few months, has not been ranked lower than fifth place in the welterweight listings since 1936. That was the year he fought Barney Ross for the title and, in the opinion of several of the writers at ringside, won the duke. Since then he has been trying to get back into the garden, but his manager, Guy Anselmi, can't find a sympathetic ear—either at Mike Jacobs' office or at the New York State Athletic Commission.

Jannazzo challenged Armstrong as long as Henry held the title, and since last September has been trailing Fritzie Zivic incessantly, without success. The New York boxing salons, in the meantime, okayed fights in which the welterweight champions engaged lightweights, while Jannazzo's bewilderment grew. Now Jannazzo can't understand why the Zivic-vs.-Mike Kaplan match was okayed, since Zivic beat Kaplan a year ago, but has not met Jannazzo, the logical challenger.

The constant disappointments haven't curdled Jannazzo on Jacobs, the commission or New York. He says that once you're inside the ropes you get a fairer shake here than in any place in the country or world. He recalls that when he went out to Australia to box Jack Carroll he got rough treatment. He put up $250 forfeit money, to make 147 pounds, as did Carroll. When Izzy weighed in he tipped 146¾. Then Carroll got on the scales and weighed 150. But Jannazzo waived his rights to Carroll's forfeit money, and was still basking in the Australian boxing fans' bravos, as a good sport, when Carroll's manager let Anselmi completely lace up Jannazzo's mittens that night before protesting that they were illegally laced.

They weren't, but Anselmi was forced to cut them and do them over again in a makeshift way, and eventually Carroll was awarded a most odiferous decision.

Anyway, here's a fellow who isn't getting any younger, but who is still right up there. We don't see how Jacobs, General Phelan, Walker Wear and Bill Brown can continue to give him the cold shoulder.

Harlem has three new sports heroes this weekend. They came in on the war-scarred S. S. Sibonet the other day—after many years abroad—and rushed right up to Lenox Avenue. They are Bob Scanlon, S. Jay Bush and John Reiff, all middle-aged colored men.

Scanlon, who fought Jack Johnson in 1912, wound up in the A. E. F., after a stretch in the foreign legion, and when the armistice came he stayed in France and opened a chicken farm near Tours. Was doing real good, too, until the Panzer troops came that way last summer. At first, he said, the Nazi offifficers and soldiers were polite enough to buy chickens from him. But one night they raided his coops, and that was too much for Scanlon. It was also, we think, a new record for anachronisms, or something, that of stealing of chickens from a colored man's henhouse. So he cleared out and became a bouncer in a Paris bar that had a definite touch of pink, before coming back here. He wore a Marshal Petain cloak when he arrived and dripped with citations.

S. Jay Bush, who is 52, was well known abroad first as a jockey and later as one of the Aga Khan's trainers. John Reiff, also middle aged, was up on two English Derby winners—Tagalie in 1913 and Richard Croker's Orby in 1907.

All speak French fluently, with Alabama overtones.

Dorimar Triumphs in Evening Handicap at Hialeah Park

Daughters of Man o' War Head Field

Get of Immortal Turf Great Run One, Two and Four; Woolf Entry Is Third

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Feb. 28.—Daughters of the immortal Man o' War virtually monopolized the payoff positions in the first running of the Evening Handicap, named after G. D. Widener's fleet filly, here today. Three of them, each 4 years old, were included in the mile and a furlong stakes for fillies and mares, and they accounted for first, second and fourth monies.

It was Dorimar, representing the Woodvale Farm of the Royce G. Martins, that wound up the heroine of the big party. With the popular Conn McCreary in the saddle, the stretch running bay was installed favorite at $5.10 for two. She came with a great rush to take the $4,810 major portion of the purse by a half length, running the 9 furlongs in 1:50 3-5. J. O. Keene's Jeanne d'Arc was second by four lengths. Herbert M. Woolf's Silvestra, coupled with Unerring, was third, while a head behind came War Beauty, a stablemate of Jeanne d'Arc, to garner fourth money.

The biggest week-day throng of the meeting, which ends tomorrow, was on hand. The turnstile count was 17,599.

After four horses, including the topweighted Sweet Willow, had scratched, 13 were left to compete in the feature, with Dorimar carrying the heaviest burden—115 pounds. McCreary's backers played his mount with great confidence. Dorimar, as usual, was far back early. She gradually picked up horses, fairly flew through the stretch and won out in the closing strides under a well-timed ride. Jeanne d'Arc, which had moved to the front from a forward position around the last bend, easily staved off Silvestra. The latter was up there all the way. War Beauty made a game finish.

DORIMAR reacted off the pace while saving ground until the stretch turn, where she swung around the leaders and, closing gamely, wore JEANNE D'ARC down in the final drive. The latter forced a steady pace and raced UP THE HILL into defeat. She drew out with a rush at the furlong pole, but then faltered when the final test came. SILVESTRA, in the thick of contention all the way, took the lead on the stretch turn, but then weakened and lasted long enough to withstand WAR BEAUTY'S bid. The latter came with a rush.

Evashevski Named Coach At Hamilton

Clinton, N. Y., Feb. 28.—Forest Evashevski, captain of Michigan's 1940 football team, was appointed head gridiron coach at Hamilton College today. Evashevski was the Washington Redskins' best choice in the National Professional League draft.

William H. Cowley, Hamilton president, announced that Mox A. Weber, head baseball and basketball coach, would assist Evashevski, who as assistant professor of physical education, will help coach other sports besides football.

In announcing Evashevski's appointment, the college president said:

"Hamilton teams are organized chiefly for student camaraderie, and our teams will play only colleges of our own type and standard. Evashevski has been selected to coach football at Hamilton because he subscribes wholeheartedly to the athletic ideals of Hamilton."

Evashevski, who did the blocking for all-American Tommy Harmon, will succeed Arthur R. Winters, former Oberlin lineman. Winters resigned last December, effective July 1, 1942, and now is on a year's leave of absence.

The Michigan star, who broke into athletics at Detroit's Northwestern High School, will move to Hamilton in April, shortly after his forthcoming marriage to Miss Ruth Brown.

State Senator's Match With 'Angel' Is Called Off

By International News Service

Boston, Mass., Feb. 28.—State Senator Joseph L. Murphy still may think that wrestling generally is a farce, but Promoter Paul Bowser announced today that the lawmaker will not climb into the ring to prove his point.

The Senator, after assailing the wrestling business, said he could defeat "The Angel," self-styled ugliest man on the mat. A match was arranged.

Promoter Bowser said today, however, that the affair was all off because the Senator failed to appear to sign contracts for the match.

MAY SURPASS GERMANY'S—Chart indicates how America's aluminum production for armament may outstrip Germany's before long. Present plans call for a total United States and Canada output of more than 1,200,000,000 pounds annually. Germany in 1939 produced 441,000,000 pounds. Adding to this production of countries now under Nazi influence, supply available to Germany is estimated at 750,000,000 pounds

$8,000,000 Rail Offering Put on Market

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 28.—A public offering of $8,000,000 in Philadelphia & Reading Terminal Railroad Co. first mortgage bonds today marked a moderate-scale revival of new corporate financing.

A banking group headed by Drexel & Co. handled the offering, consisting of $3,500,000 in serial bonds maturing 1941-51 with interest of .50 to 2.62 per cent and $4,500,000 of 3½ per cent bonds.

Proceeds, supplemented by funds from the Reading Co., will be used to repay $8,500,000 of 5 per cent bonds maturing May 1.

A block of 52,500 shares of common stock of the G. C. Murphy Co., a variety store chain operating mainly in Pensylvania, West Virginia and Ohio, was offered late yesterday and quickly oversubscribed in a further resumption of over-the-counter sales of listed securities.

Only a dribble of new securities reached the market this week as unsteady bond and stock prices continued to hold up expected financing.

Public offerings during the week ended yesterday totaled $9,383,000 compared with $140,562,651 in the same period a year ago, Poor's Publishing Co. reported today. "It was the third successive week that new offerings were at low levels.

Underwriting circles attributed the sluggishness of new offerings partly to the desire of prospective borrowers to appraise the success of the Treasury financing this week.

Trade Circles See Copper Shortage

By the Associated Press

New York, Feb. 28.—Trade quarters forecast today that United States Copper requirements through May would exceed present supplies, and supplies now in sight, by 50,000 tons or more.

This estimate was based on the assumption, widely held in the copper market, that February-March-April-May consumption would average around 135,000 tons monthly, or a total of 540,000 tons for the four months.

January consumption reached the record amount of nearly 122,000 tons.

Demand would be met by monthly domestic production of roughly 360,000 tons for the four-month period, plus 110,000 of Latin America copper expected to be available, plus around 20,000 tons of copper ordered by France before defeat by Germany and held in this country in bond, which may be acquired by the United States.

Total supplies would thus come to 490,000 tons. With needs calculated at 540,000, there would be a defici tof 50,000 tons.

New Promotion Drive Planned By Dodge Motors

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, Feb. 28.—Dodge will present one of its most extensive promotion efforts this year, stressing fluid drive and low price, it was announced today.

The current advertising plans include a material increase in the use of newspaper lineage, according to Ruthrauff & Ryan, Dodge advertising agency.

According to E. J. Poag, assistant sales manager of Dodge, the effectiveness of newspaper advertising in getting showroom play is one of the most powerful influences in motor car promotion.

Ruthrauff & Ryan points out that this increased newspaper lineage will not only apply to factory's national newspaper expenditure, but that the agency's field organization reports that dealers generally throughout the country are planning to step up their local cooperative newspaper advertising as well.

Auto Output Dip Anticipated Soon

Detroit, Feb. 28 (AP).—A moderate decline in automotive productoin levels may result from subordination of manufacturing requirements to national defense needs, Ward's Reports, Inc., said today in its weekly report of the industry.

Production in the meantime is holding firm with the current week's operations estimated at 126,550 cars and trucks, compared to 127,740 last week and 100,855 last year at this time, said the survey.

The industry is moving to replace aluminum parts of motors with units made of other metals to cooperate with defense needs, a changeover that may cause temporary slackening on assembly lines, said Ward's.

Upswing in Long-Dormant Power Issues Features List; Steels and Motors Retreat

New York, Feb. 28.—The stock market today stepped out of Februray with mild rallying tendencies stressed mainly by a belated upswing in long-dormant utilities.

Steels wavered and slipped after touching off a quiet forenoon advance. Except for the power company issues, which pushed forward in the final hour, earlier advances of fractions to a point or so for industrials were substantially reduced or cancelled at the close.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks managed to retain a net recovery of .2 of a point at 41.5, but on the month was down .6. Transfers of 405,880 shares were the largest since February 20 and compared with 312,010 yesterday.

The utility group was enlivened by the testimony of SEC Commissioner Pike before the temporary national economic committee suggesting insurance firms might well invest some of their funds in common stocks of sound power and light companies.

Settlement by the Government of the Bethlehem Steel strike brought in moderate bidding after a hesitant start, brokers said, but this influence apparently waned when the thought occurred to some that the corporation might be the loser in the final adjustment of its labor difficulties. Threats of union rifts in other quarters also dimmed market enthusiasm to some extent.

Motors backed down when it was estimated this week's automotive output was off about 1,000 units, although predictions were made that March assemblies would reach 525,000 which, except for 1929, would be a peak for this month.

Steels were not particularly responsive to the release by the President of a survey by the Office of Production Management which found steel mill operating capacity sufficient for domestic defense and civilian needs. The Chief Executive also saw no necessity for steel priorities at this time.

War news was complicated marketwise by a cloudier Far Eastern picture and indications the Nazis were beginning a mass advance in the Balkans. This tended to offset reports of a Turkish-British agreement.

Listen! with Glynn

If you people remember a popular CBS radio series of a couple of years ago, called "This Is New York," and another only a few months ago in Columbia's "Forecast" series, called "Duffy's Tavern," you'll also remember Ed Gardner, the acting gentleman, who ably portrayed the role of Archie, somewhat illiterate, but articulate fellow, who had no trouble at all in making you laugh.

And so this is to bring you the gladsome tidings that the Schick Razor people liked the presentations so much that when they went on the lookout for a new radio show, they chose Gardner as the star and "Duffy's Tavern" as the show. And that show as a regular CBS series makes its debut over WJSV at 8:30 tonight, to be heard every Saturday at the same time.

The locale of "Duffy's Tavern" sounds suspiciously like Brooklyn although we're not told exactly where it is. And while Archie is not Mr. Duffy, the proprietor, he seems to be around Duffy's much more than Mr. Duffy. But there is a Miss Duffy, you'll be pleased to hear—played by Shirley Booth, who's currently starring in the Broadway hit, "My Sister Eileen"—and a host of other colorful characters who'll be portrayed by well known radio and stage stars.

This notice isn't meant to be a memory test, but certainly a lot of you will also remember John Kirby's Orchestra which did amazing things to popular tunes in CBS's "Flow Gently Sweet Rhythm." Well, Kirby's Orchestra is to provide the music for "Duffy's Tavern."

Today's hand involves an expert safety play by declarer which many of us would miss. It is also marked by good defense. West leads the seven of diamonds, East takes the king and ace and returns the five. South follows with the eight, and West is forced to ruff with the spade four. How should declarer play from here on?

Today's Hand

North-South Vulnerable
SOUTH DEALER

	♠ J 10 3 2 ♡ K 8 4 ◇ Q 10 ♣ 9 8 7 3
♠ 4 ♡ Q 10 9 6 5 3 ◇ 7 3 ♣ 10 6 5 2	NORTH	♠ K 9 8 ♡ J ◇ A K J 9 6 5 ♣ Q J 4
	♠ A Q 7 6 5 ♡ A 7 2 ◇ 8 4 3 ♣ K

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	3 ◇
4 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 7 ◇.

East's defense made it hard for declarer. The return of a low diamond forced West to ruff, and if dummy wants to win the trick, it will take the spade ten. After that East will make a spade trick, and South has a losing heart also.

So the answer is for dummy to discard a heart on trick three, since a heart must be lost anyway. Then the trumps can be picked up, and declarer has no more losers. Discarding the heart loser gives nothing away and increases the chances for picking up trumps.

Had declarer trumped with the ten, East would have made a spade trick and a heart which, together with the two diamonds, would have set the hand one.

Byron Rites Set Today at Hagerstown

Funeral services will be held today at Hagerstown, Md., for Representative William D. Byron, killed in a plane crash near Atlanta, Ga., early Thursday.

The body of the Representative is due to reach Washington at 7 o'clock this morning on a train from Atlanta. It will be taken to Hagerstown, where it will lie in state until 2 o'clock in the St. John's Episcopal Church.

A private service will be held at 2:30 p. m. at the home of Mr. Byron's mother, Mrs. J. C. Byron, in Hagerstown. Half hour later public services will be conducted at the church.

Burial will be in the family plot at Riverview Cemetery.

Honorary pallbearers will include the entire membership of the House Military Affairs Committee, of which Representative Byron was a member; the Maryland delegation in Congress Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor, Speaker Rayburn; Majority Leader McCormack, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Compton, Mayor Richard Hawkins of Hagerstown and members of the town council of Williamsport, and other friends.

Successor Speculation

Speculation regarding a successor to Representative William D. Byron continued yesterday to be intermixed with expressions of regret at his death among political-minded residents of Montgomery County, Md.

Consensus seemed to place W. Preston Lane, jr., Hagerstown lawyer and newspaper publisher, as leading contender for the Democratic nomination. Lane is national Democratic committeeman for Maryland.

William O. Walsh, attorney general of Maryland, also was generally conceded to have a good chance. Talk yesterday was shifting to possibility of drafting former Representative David J. Lewis, who gave up his post as Congressman from the Sixth Maryland District to wage an unsuccessful "purge" campaign against Senator Millard Tydings.

Also named are Joseph A. Cantrell, of Chevy Chase; Eugene Casey, of Gaithersburg; Judge Stedman Prescott of the Sixth Circuit Court, and Maj. E. Brooke Lee, Montgomery County Democratic leader.

Most, who were willing to talk, were certain that Charles P. Stewart, of Allegany County, would be the Republican candidate chosen. Walter P. Johnson, former baseball star, who was defeated by Byron in the November election, said he was not a candidate.

Cinderella for a Day Is Wed To Relative of Empress

Copyright International News Service

New York, Feb. 28.—When Wilma Baard, the barge captain's daughter, was "presented to society" two years ago by 14 "uncles," they did not know they were launching her on the route to the European peerage.

She was married today to Count Nava de Tajo, handsome Spanish nobleman who is a great-grandnephew of the Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon 3d.

The count, a close friend of King Alfonso, planned a unique honeymoon with his bride. They will be accompanied on a trip to California by two other couples, one of whom will be George Lowther and the former Eileen Herrick, whose romance and wedding a year ago held the headlines for weeks.

The other couple, the Baroness Marjorie de Jong, of Paris, bridesmaid at the wedding, and Fletcher Godfrey, the best man, may be married when they reach Hollywood.

The countess, raised on a tugboat until she was 5, was introduced to society the same week that Brenda Frazier came out. She was a top-flight model and was selected by the "Uncles," including Peter Arno, Lucius Beebe, McClelland Barclay and Leroy Ward, to appear at a take-off on the debutante parties.

The count came to America three months ago. He is an official of the Spanish S. S. Line.

Blackouts Give Germans Taste Of Adventure

By Edwin Shanke.

This is the concluding story of a series by Edwin Shanke and Lynn Heinzerling, both just returned from Germany.

New York, Feb. 28.—Life in Germany isn't a complete blackout. It has some of its brightest moments when it's blackest.

"You have been to dinner or a show with a friend. At the door he says "Bolona" and you shoot back, "S. O. S."

It doesn't mean that he is insulting you or that you are calling for help. It's just the Berlin way of saying good night since the British have been coming.

"Bolona" stands for "bombenlose nacht," meaning "bombless night" and "S. O. S." is short for "schlaf ohne sirenen" or "sleep without sirens."

Then you hustle off for the underground train home. Perhaps you meet an acquaintance. The conversation is in English.

"When in Germany speak German," comes a guttural command from the other end of the car. You look up surprised. "We have enough English spies in Germany already. If you don't speak German, I'll have to call the police."

"But we're American!"

Pasted on each car window is the stern face of a steel-helmeted German soldier with his forefinger set across his lips to seal them. The caption reads: "The enemy is listening."

Americans are Liked

There is a moment of embarassed silence. Then a more genial passenger relieves the tension with a jolly laugh. The whole car bursts into a roar.

"We like Americans," says the genial passenger. Red-faced, the objector steps out at the next station.

Or:

You take a bus on a very inky night. It just crawls along, but even so the trip seems to take much longer than usual. The driver seems to be making unfamiliar turns. One passenger peering into the night discovers the bus is way off the route. Sure enough, the driver is one of those "wrong way" fellows and you've landed miles from home.

"I'm new on this run and the blackout confused me," the driver volunteers sheepishly. "Hop in; we'll try again."

Snowbound, Payless, Meade Soldiers Glum

By Marshall Andrews

Post Staff Correspondent.

Fort George G. Meade, Feb. 28.—Snowed in and payless, the Twenty-ninth Division tonight faced a dreary weekend at the conclusion of its first month in Federal service.

Officers, who are paid by check on the basis of their own vouchers, were paid tonight. One unit of the division, Headquarters Battery of the Fifty-fourth Field Artillery Brigade, was paid in full. Enlisted men of all other units must wait at least until next week for their pay.

The division special troops, most of whom are from the District, will be paid Monday afternoon, as will the 111th Field Artillery (Virginia), 115th Infantry, from Maryland, including units near Washington, and the 176th Infantry (Virginia). The District's 121st Engineers, 111th Field Artillery (Maryland), 176th Field Artillery (Pennsylvania), the 104th Quartermaster Regiment, including four District companies, and the 104th Medical Regiment (Maryland and Virginia), will be paid "probably" Wednesday.

Pay Date Unknown

Scheduled for pay at "a date unknown at the present time" are the 116th Infantry, from the Shenandoah Valley and western Virginia, and the 175 Infantry, from Baltimore. The delay in pay, it was explained, is due to difficulties in completing pay rolls during the disorganization of induction and concentration here.

Although hundreds of men expressed the desire to return home for the weekend and railroads North and South offered excursion rates, comparatively few will make the trip this week, due to lack of funds. At least 80, from Richmond, have scraped together the $3.50 for rail fare and others will go by private automobiles.

For those who remain here, regimental and division church services have been arranged under direction of Lieut. Col. Fred C. Reynolds, of Baltimore, division chaplain. Protestant services will be held in regimental areas by regimental chaplains Sunday between 8:30 and 9:45 a. m.

Confessions will be heard for Catholic soldiers Saturday from 6:30 to 9 p. m. at locations convenient to the regimental areas. Three masses will be celebrated Sunday morning.

Catholic Lenten services will be held every Friday, beginning today, at 7 p. m. at the post gymnasium

U. S. Control of Insurance Is Urged in Report to TNEC

By John R. Oakes

Post Staff Writer

Proposals for limited Federal supervision of the insurance business and for the "eventual elimination" of industrial insurance were offered to the Temporary National Economic Committee yesterday by Commissioner Sumner T. Pike, of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The report urged strengthened State controls over insurance, and a revision of State laws to permit insurance companies to invest "a relatively small percentage of their funds" in common stocks of "substantial corporations with an established record of earnings." Insurance investment is now generally limited to Government obligations and first lien bonds or mortgages.

The report made no recommendation as to the size of insurance companies, although it noted that life insurance presents "a picture of concentration of economic power, which is not equaled elsewhere in our American economy."

In recommending the "gradual disappearance" of industrial insurance—which is now held by some 50,000,000 people in the United States, mostly in low income groups—the report advocated as a substitute either the extension of Social Security benefits or the development of a system of selling burial benefits through the Postoffice.

Pike, the Securities Commission's representative on the TNEC, said his recommendations represented the views only of himself and of Gerhard Gesell, special counsel in charge of the insurance study conducted by the SEC. This survey, he pointed out, was the first "over all" inquiry into the insurance business since the investigation, of which Chief Justice Hughes was counsel, in 1906.

"High Pressure' Found

Declaring that industrial life insurance is "the most expensive," "has resulted in enormous profits," and "is frequently sold by undesirable high pressure methods," Pike said State laws have been "inadequate" to curb its evils.

"The gradual disappearance and eventual elimination of industrial insurance" should be "encouraged," said Pike, "either through extension of Federal and State Social Security programs to provide a lump sum death benefit for all the populace in an amount sufficient to cover burial and to compensate for expenses attendant upon the last illness, or through the development of a system for selling burial benefits through the facilities of the postal system . . . Nothing should be done to cancel existing policies."

Insisting that "we do not recommend any form of strict, all-inclusive Federal regulation," the report urged that the Federal Government "assist the States . . . by giving adviser and as collector and distri- exercising some slight supervision over certain primarily interstate aspects of the business." Each interstate company should register with the Government, Pike suggested.

Too Much for States

With the declaration that the Federal Government should act in the insurance field "primarily as an advisor an das a collector and distributor of information," the report said, however, that "there are grievances in the insurance business with which the States . . . are unable to cope."

For instance, the "phantom companies" licensed in one State but soliciting business by mail, telephone or radio in another where they have no licenses, were cited as fit subjects for Federal control; and legislation to this end was recommended.

The report urged that some agency of the Federal Government—it specifically stated the SEC was not a candidate for the job—be empowered to obtain "complete information concerning the operations of life insurance companies." This agency could give publicity to "significant facts" about insurance operations, the report suggested.

Legislation Urged

Amendment of the National Bankruptcy Act was advocated to permit the Federal Government to apply to Federal court for liquidation or reorganization of an insurance company with impaired reserves. A Federal statute was recommended to prevent officers and directors of interstate insurance companies "from using their positions for improper personal gain;" and the Federal agency concerned with insurance should be given "visitorial powers" over interstate companies, the report suggested. The agency could thus examine such companies, and "test occasionally the efficiency of State regulation in a particular area."

"In order to give every possible encouragement to State regulation and to assist insurance company managements to solve their own problems without legislative compulsion," the report urged establishment of an Insurance Advisory Council, composed chiefly of Federal, State and company officials. It would submit an annual report to Congress on "the state of the insurance business."

Newlywed, AWOL, Sought Roosevelt Aid

Newark, N. J., Feb. 28.—How Private Wilson Pershing Canfield, 22, went A. W. O. L. from Fort Dix, N. J., two hours after his induction into the Army and called at the White House in Washington in a vain attempt to have President Roosevelt arrange his deferment from the draft was related yesterday by his bride of a month, Mrs. Elsie Canfield, 18, of Newark.

A month before their marriage on January 17, she said, he got a job as a porter in a welding shop in Newark with the hope of being able to work long enough before his draft number was called to support her during his year of military service.

Although assured by his draft board that his number would be six months in coming up, her husband, she said, was inducted on January 23 and sent to Fort Dix.

Canfield, she said, was worried about her because her doctor had told her that she was suffering from secondary anemia and should not work.

He skipped out of Fort Dix and thumbed his way to Newark. After writing to President Roosevelt explaining that he was not a draft dodger, he decided to go with his wife to the White House to tell their predicament. They got as far as the door, where they were told to go to the War Department. Canfield, in view of his being A. W. O. L. did not, however, relish an interview with the Army.

Returned to Newark, they wrote then to Mrs. Roosevelt but received no answer. Canfield remained at home until a week ago, when military police called to escort him back to Fort Dix. He was locked in the guardhouse but later released to await a court martial.

Mrs. Canfield, meanwhile, went to work as a clerk in a 5 and 10 cent store.
